

Medicare Tab Rises By $170M

Proposed changes in federal financing of medicare will cost B.C. $170 million over the next five years, Health Minister Dennis Cocke said today.

The minister released the figure here at the opening of a two-day gathering of provincial health ministers, who are plotting strategy to fight federal plans to cut back on health care financing.

In his opening statement to the meeting, Cocke asked other provinces to also calculate their losses over the next five years if Ottawa goes through with its June 23 budget proposal to put a ceiling on its contribution to medicare.

(The total cost to all provinces will likely be about $1.7 billion, Cocke told reporters outside the closed-door meeting.)

B.C. also called on the other provinces to "unanimously agree to refer the matter to the premiers' conference in Newfoundland later this week."

"I'd like to see the whole matter clarified by the first minister," said Cocke. "... It has to be settled on a political level first."

He called on the provinces to express unanimous objection to the federal government move and to boycott any further technical discussions on health care financing until the question of principle has been resolved.

The provinces, he said, should agree to refrain from individual discussions with the federal minister of health until a resolution has been found.

The June 23 budget proposed that the federal government would place a ceiling on the increases it will make to the cost of medicare starting next year. Ottawa now pays about 50 per cent of approved health care costs.

Ottawa also announced it would terminate in five years its participation in hospital care financing, in which it similarly pays 50 per cent of costs at present.

The other provincial health ministers also presented position papers at today's conference and indications are they will be unanimous in opposing the federal proposals.

Convicts Charged With Murder

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Three prisoners arrested after a June hostage-taking incident at the B.C. penitentiary have been charged with murder punishable by life imprisonment, crown lawyer Thomas Fisher said Sunday.

Fisher said in an interview the charges were laid last week and will be read in provincial court today when prisoners Clair Wilson, Dwight Lucas and Andrew Bruce appear. They are also charged with attempted escape, attempted extortion, unlawful confinement and possession of offensive weapons.

Ladysmith Race Fight Sees 2 Whites Shot

LADYSMITH — A 25-year-old man was to appear in Nanaimo provincial court today on two attempted murder charges.

William Rossbleff, a native Indian of no fixed address, was arrested about 5 p.m. Sunday following a 14-hour search and blockade of the Chemainus Indian band reserve three miles north of Ladysmith.

The arrest followed a fight that broke out about 2 a.m. Sunday between a group of whites and Indians outside the Sportsman Hotel on First Avenue after the bar closed.

Three shots were fired, sending Bradley David Lockhart, 23, and Robert Tamtagne, 24, both of Ladysmith, to hospital.

Lockhart is in fair condition today in Nanaimo General Hospital with gunshot wounds in the arm and abdomen. Lamontagne was treated for superficial wounds to the stomach and arm, and released.

Ladysmith RCMP said they found a .303 rifle at the scene.

A helicopter, a police dog and 17 policemen from nearby detachments were brought in to help with the search, which ended when the dog flushed a suspect from brush near the reserve.

RCMP said the suspect is not a member of the Chemainus band.

Hard-working officials took a rest as the Western Canada Games ended in Regina on the weekend but there was talk of renewing them to 1979, possibly in Victoria. Vancouver Island athletes took a share of the spotlight on the weekend with Philip Delesalle, a 16-year-old gymnast from Victoria, emerging as the games' top individual winner with five of a possible six gold medals. Refinery Fire Kills 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Three firemen died when they were caught in flames Sunday during a spectacular refinery blaze and were turned into human torches.

At least three more firemen were missing and five others were among 13 persons injured in the fire at the Gulf Oil Co. refinery which started Sunday. It was declared under control early this morning by the Philadelphia fire board.

"The flames just engulfed them," said Fire Commissioner Joseph Rizzo, describing how he escaped the first of dozens of explosions, but looked back to see three of his men sealed in flames.

"They were trying to get under the foam, but to no avail," he said. "They were human torches."

The blaze at the second-largest refinery on the East Coast could be seen for 20 miles. Flames covering an area about a half-mile square roared into a spreading cloud of black smoke.

The fire started at dawn Sunday when an 80,000-barrel storage tank ignited while being filled with oil from a tanker.

Brontfman Home Safe, $2.3M Ransom Recovered

Brontfman with FBI agents after rescue

Times News Services

NEW YORK — The kidnapping ordeal of Samuel Brontfman II came to an abrupt and safe end early Sunday when scores of federal agents freed him from a Brooklyn apartment.

Eight days of pressure apparently were too much for one of two suspects on the case. Dominick Byrne, wracked by conscience, led officers to the dimly lit apartment where they freed Brontfman and captured the second of his alleged abductors.

"It was over in two seconds," said Detective Thomas Cerbone, who broke into the one-bedroom apartment Sunday with police and FBI agents.

Officers grabbed a surprised Mel Patrick Lynch, 37, who was guarding young Brontfman.

Samuel, 21, was abducted Aug. 9 after leaving his father's tree-shrouded estate in Yorkton Heights, N.Y. His car, keys still in the ignition, was found in the driveway of his divorced mother's home in Purchase, N.Y.

Cerbone said Byrne, who gave officers the key to the apartment where the youth was found, had "pangs of conscience" about the affair.

"He's a deeply religious man. He must have said 'Jesus Christ' and apologized to me five times for saying it," the detective said.

Byrne, apparently alarmed by increasing FBI surveillance in the area near the Lynch apartment, allegedly sent his daughter Mary to a neighborhood police station with a note saying he knew where the Brontfman youth was being held.

Cerbone and his partner, James Senry, went to his house at midnight. Byrne appeared relieved, as he told them about Brontfman's location.

But apparently authorities already were closing in on the pair.

The New York Daily News, quoting "highly informed sources," said Brontfman was ordered to bring the money Saturday morning and wait in an underpass beneath a subway line in an outlying New York borough.

The money was in 49 packets of bills in denominations of $10, $20, $50 and $100. The ransom was half the $4.6 million originally demanded by the kidnapers.

Brontfman, accompanied by a female FBI agent, drove to the location, the news said. About 3 a.m., a rust-colored 1971 automobile pulled up and someone ordered Brontfman to put the money into the trunk, the news said.

As the car sped away, the agent took down its licence number.

Neighbors of the two suspects described them as frugal, hard-working, deeply religious men with strong feelings about the strike in their native Ireland.

Byrne, 53, owner of a limousine service, and Lynch, a city fireman, were charged with extortion by mail. The FBI said they believed the two acted alone. Officers said the elderly friend was an innocent victim of the scheme.

If convicted, the two could be fined up to $5,000 and sentenced to 20 years in prison. Federal agents indicated they may be charged with kidnapping later.

Young Brontfman and his father left the city Sunday for seclusion and rest. The family said there would be no statements.

But a spokesman added, "Sam is in really fine shape. His spirits are great."

For Cerbone and other officers, it was the end of a frustrating week of searching and tense negotiations.

Port Mellon Pulpworkers Vote 96% Against Report

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian pulpworker union members at a mill northwest of here have voted 96 per cent to reject a non-binding report on the British Columbia forest dispute, a union officer said Sunday.

Fred Allmutt, a delegate to the union's negotiating committee said in an interview the 400 members at Canadian Forest Product's Port Mellon mill voted Friday and Saturday.

Both the CPU and the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada have recommended that their 13,000 members reject the report by Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon of the B.C. Supreme Court.

The workers, on strike since July 16, have shut down B.C.'s 20 pulp mills to support contract demands.

The International Woodworkers of America, representing about 6,000 woodworkers in the southern interior, and 29,000 on the coast, have remained on the job.

A union spokesman said during the weekend that IWA negotiators were to meet here today and an announcement would probably be made about the negotiating committee's recommendation on the report.

The Hutcheon report proposes wage increases totalling $1.55 an hour during a two-year contract.

The IWA originally sought an increase of $1 an hour on the current base rate of $5.10 an hour and the pulp unions $1.50 an hour on the same base rate.

Packers Appeal to LRB

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Fisheries Association of British Columbia has asked the provincial labor relations board to declare illegal a strike that has shut down the west coast fishing industry for three weeks.

In the latest move to end the strike, which has halted all fish-packing operations on the B.C. coast, the companies have asked the board to rule that the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union (UFAWU) has violated the labor code by continuing to picket after two UFAWU sections accepted the industry offer.

Although the fishermen have rejected three offers from the 14 fish packing companies, in the association, union shoreworkers and tendermen have accepted contract offers.

Homer Stevens, president of the 7,000-member unions, said Sunday the companies are "well aware that if any section refuses, the strike continues."

UFAWU members have been on strike since July 25.

Stevens said that if the association wants to bargain separately with union groups, "there could be three different strikes... we could be on strike all the time."

"I think instead of running to the board for this kind of thing they should get back to the bargaining table," Stevens said.

Rabin Backs Pact

United Press International
Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin appeared before an angry session of the Israeli parliament today and defended the proposed interim peace agreement with Egypt against charges by right-wing opponents that the U.S. was forcing it down Israel's throat.

Rabin cautioned that the agreement was not yet complete and could still fail. Although he said negotiations were still at a delicate state, sentiment appeared to be building up among right-wingers against the secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. These right-wing Likud party members demanded that Rabin resign.

Forty demonstrators gathered in front of the U.S. embassy in Tel Aviv today, 10 of them carrying rabbits. They also carried signs reading "Kissinger go home" and "Rabin, you're a rabbit."

The right-wing groups called for major demonstrations when Kissinger arrives here Thursday and police were taking unusually firm security precautions to protect the secretary of state, ringing the King David Hotel in Jerusalem with extra troops.

Before appearing in parliament Rabin told a caucus of his labor party's ruling alignment that the U.S. had made "unprecedented" promises to Israel. These presumably were the use of a U.S. civilian force to help man early warning systems in the demilitarized zone of the Sinai Desert and nearly $3 billion in aid.

In an address punctuated by jeers and catcalls Rabin assured his critics there was no danger to Israel's security.

Agreement Reported Among Lisbon Leaders

5 Held On Arson Charges

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — The leftist newspaper Republica said today Portugal's far left military rulers have reached an agreement with army moderates that could change the political course of the government and dump pro-Communist Premier Vasco Goncalves.

The report came as anti-Communist violence spread today to the Azores Islands where angry crowds burned a Communist party headquarters.

The Republica account of Goncalves' possible ouster and formation of a new cabinet followed an emergency meeting of the ruling three-man junta with Portugal's military chiefs. Goncalves was reported fighting the pressure for him to resign.

Republica, the one-time socialist paper that now represents the view of the far left after its takeover by pro-Communist workers, said the compromise would still contain the far left's desire for the creation of a mass popular movement.

But it said the leader of this faction, military security chief Gen. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, agreed to go along with most of the other proposals by the moderates.

Grows protesting Goncalves' pro-Communist policies burned or destroyed Communist party or other extremist leftist headquarters in more than 50 Portuguese towns and cities during the past few weeks. At least six persons have died and hundreds were injured.

The Azores Islands in the Atlantic, site of a major U.S. air base, have shown signs of increasing dissatisfaction with the left-wing military leaders in Lisbon and have spoken of declaring their own independence. The Portuguese colony of Timor in the Indonesian archipelago has done the same, touching off violence in which several hundred persons were hurt.

A crowd of farmers in Angola do Heroldo in the Azores early today attacked and burned the local Communist headquarters after meeting to discuss milk prices. Police said the fire spread and burned down an adjacent bakery.

LUNENBURG, West Germany (AP) — Five persons have been arrested for allegedly starting some of the fires that devastated more than 60 square miles of brushland and forests in northern Germany, police said Sunday.

They also reported that one policeman was killed and another was seriously injured when their patrol car overturned while they were pursuing an auto driven by another suspected arsonist.

Being held for questioning were three transients, an area resident and a mentally-retarded, 17-year-old youth who were picked up at various locations in the fire zone, police said.

Weekend rains helped firefighters control the blazes in three separate regions that caused damage estimated at $60 million.

Many of the 15,000 firefighters were sent home Sunday but authorities said 2,000 men in skeleton crews would maintain watch.

MRS. HOFFA SICK

DETROIT (UPI) — After 18 days, the tension and fear became too much for Josephine Hoffa. The ailing wife of missing teamsters leader James Hoffa collapsed Sunday and was hospitalized.

Mrs. Hoffa, devoted to the former teamsters' president who disappeared July 30, broke down in her suburban Lake Orion, Mich., home "from the strain and the stress." She is exhausted, physically and emotionally, her son, James P. Hoffa, 34, said.

The scores of federal, state and city police searching for Hoffa were just as frustrated, if infinitely less emotionally involved.

Michigan State Police director George Halverson said, "we don't even know what crime we are investigating. All we know is that we have got a missing person."

"But I think there will be a break. They've got some excellent investigators on this case and I think there will be a break eventually."

eries until UFAWU shoreworkers and tendermen are back on the job.

However, insofar as UFAWU shoreworkers and tendermen have signed memorandums of understanding with the fisheries association, we regard this as a contract and feel that those workers should return to their jobs in the fish plants," said Hindle.

Spokesmen for both the brotherhood and the fisheries association have said B.C. fishermen are not covered by existing labor legislation and therefore are not recognized as being organized within labor unions.

Hindle said fishermen, as such are free agents selling their catch to buyers at prices that may be adjusted upward with demand.

Meanwhile, the UFAWU has asked Premier Dave Barrett and Labor Minister Bill King to halt the granting of ex-parte injunctions in labor disputes.

Two ex-parte injunctions — injunctions on behalf of one party — were granted last week by the B.C. Supreme Court prohibiting picketing by the UFAWU at two sites in Victoria. The injunctions were the first since the new B.C. Labor Code was approved in 1973.

An appeal by the UFAWU against the ex-parte injunction was adjourned today until 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Articling student Paul Jarman told Mr. Justice R.A. Wootton that counsel for the union, from the Vancouver law firm of Rankin and Company, was unable to proceed this morning.

Coast Shellfish Company Limited, 5871 Sooke Road, obtained an ex-parte injunction from Mr. Justice Wootton last Thursday to halt union picketing of a company truck in Esquimalt which was loaded with fish headed for the United States.

Last Friday, Mr. Justice Wootton issued a second ex-parte injunction against the fishermen's union halting picketing at Oakland Industries Limited, 630 Montreal.

Union spokesman Reg Payne said today the UFAWU's executive board was meeting in Vancouver to consider its reaction to this injunction.

the weather

A surge of moisture from Washington state is expected to move into southern B.C. this morning and will likely be accompanied by sporadic rains. Northern regions of the province will remain showery today with thundershowers also in prospect for much of the interior late in the day. Meanwhile an area of high pressure approaching from the Pacific should begin to establish a slow drying trend throughout B.C. tomorrow.

Waste Not, Want Not

Some important inventions and scientific breakthroughs are the results of the efforts of inventors and tinkers and crackpots who to the rest of us seem to be wasting their time. Change comes slowly in the mundane routine of daily life. We are reluctant to adopt improvements; people are comfortable with the familiar.

All of which may be a rather high-flown explanation for the curious refusal of local and provincial officialdom to experiment with some new methods of disposing of human wastes. Sewage treatment is not an exciting topic of debate, but people should be concerned about the official brush-off given to a couple of cheap and apparently efficient methods proposed by Victoria-area residents.

A View Royal man, John White, has developed a system for filtering septic tank waste that he claims is better than conventional secondary sewage treatment. From as far afield as Ontario, he's had interested inquiries about the system, which utilizes a sub-surface bed of sand. It costs $250 to install, much less than the bill for a regulation septic tank and tile dispersal field.

White Rock inventor Cy Jones has devised another system which uses a surface bed of coal (from the huge Hat Creek deposit near Lillooet) instead of sand to filter the waste water from a septic tank.

In tests, both systems have produced amazing results for such seemingly crude affairs. The water that comes off from each system is colorless and odorless.

But except for John White's own backyard demonstration project and a coal bed at a home in Metchosin and two small coal filtration operations in the Fraser Valley at meat packing plants, these alternate systems are not widespread. Even these few are regarded as headaches, intrusions into a neat and tidy plan, and they have not been encouraged much by any level of government.

Health department officials and regional health officers are charged with maintaining the public health, a serious responsibility. Septic tanks and chlorination (more recently, secondary treatment) with eventual disposal in the ground or large bodies of water have been the traditional methods of getting rid of human wastes.

Septic tanks don't work well in some areas. On much of the Saanich peninsula, septic tanks have to be pumped out regularly and new tile drain fields laid down again, all because of the clayey nature of the sub-surface soil.

In a world increasingly aware of the interrelated nature of everything, aware that dumping wastes into the Fraser River or Juan de Fuca Strait ricochets with some, possibly devastating counter-effect somewhere, some time, we should be trying to find better ways, ways that do more with less.

The very least government should do is encourage experimentation, provide seed money for a few demonstration projects, monitor the results and compare performance with the traditional waste disposal methods.

Consider it insurance money. If they don't prove out, fine. If they do, taxpayers will have been saved no small amount. The new secondary treatment plant for the Vancouver region cost $15 million, and the eventual tertiary-treatment facility will be even more expensive.

Auto Pact Under Fire—Again

WASHINGTON — Annual emissions of exhaust about the Canada-United States automobile agreement are more noxious than ever this year.

The simplest explanation is that the U.S. automobile industry is generally worse off than ever before.

Sales are slumping, unemployment is high. Imports are grabbing more of the market.

The result is an unusually close scrutiny of auto industry trade with Canada, which could conceivably result in some retaliatory action by the U.S.

The scrutiny has taken two forms—an investigation into charges of dumping (selling cars in the U.S. below the Canadian price) and an inquiry into the overall economics of auto trade between the two countries.

Both these investigations are currently in the hands of the International Trade Commission, formerly known as the U.S. Tariff Commission, which will hold a public hearing of the dumping charges on Tuesday. But to varying degrees the labor department, treasury, customs, state department, congress and the White House are or could become involved before it is all over.

Back and Forth

The auto pact of 1965 was supposed to establish free trade in the automotive industry between the two countries. But there has been almost perpetual controversy throughout the last decade as to whether this has actually happened. The balance has swung back and forth, first favoring one country, then the other.

The latest figures, for the first five months of this year, show that in dollars, the U.S. had an advantage of $671 million.

But if you look at cars alone, Canada has the edge, both in dollars, $400 million, and numbers. And car assembly is where the most jobs are.

Current unemployment in the U.S. auto industry is 104,000, and was at a peak of twice this number in March, according to the United Auto Workers. It's said to be only about 2,000 in Canada.

Over-all employment is higher in the U.S., too, running at 8.4 per cent, compared to Canada's 7.2 per cent, which helps to explain general U.S. agitation over anything resembling a threat to American jobs.

In congress most of the fuss about the auto pact has been made by two long-time critics, Senator Vance Hartke of Indiana, and Representative John Dent of Pennsylvania, both Democrats. But this year they have succeeded in getting the government to look into their complaints. Hartke through the senate fi-

It's also significant that the UAW didn't complain about Canadian-made cars, either. They couldn't because they represent workers in both countries.

Yet both industry and labor are involved in a bizarre situation that resulted in special benefits being paid by the U.S. labor department to 18,000 laid-off Chrysler workers.

These employees, the labor department found, were affected by Canadian conditions. What happened was that Chrysler, which is having a miserable year generally, scored a surprise success with its intermediate-sized Cordoba, made in Windsor, Ont.

As one official here put it, "when they were casting around for a plant to build it, they probably thought, this could be another Edsel—let's put it in Canada. But it didn't turn out that way."

The auto pact provides two mechanisms for redress if either country considers itself injured. Either country can terminate the pact by giving 12 months' notice. And either country can seek "consultations" to negotiate changes.

So far there is no sign of the U.S. following these options, but presumably this is what it would do if by the end of the year it decided it was dissatisfied.

Meanwhile, there are three more intriguing twists in the road.

Not Hurting

One is the solemn declaration, by General Motors president Elliot M. Estes and by William Eberle, president of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association, that imports are not hurting the U.S. auto industry.

The second is the recent testimony before a congressional committee by Ronald Glantz, vice-president of Mitchell Hutchins Inc., an auto industry analyst.

"My analysis of the rise in import market share," he said, "indicates that the fault lies primarily with Detroit for not providing the American consumer with smaller and more energy-efficient cars."

The third is that president Gerald Ford, who is already helping the auto industry by seeking postponement of anti-pollution standards, comes from Michigan, the auto state, and in the final analysis what he decides is what counts.

Image Problem for Man. NDP?

WINNIPEG — Edward Schreyer, like most socialists who are successful in achieving political power, often comes under attack from within the ranks of his own party for being too moderate, and for lacking the socialist zeal for nationalization. Indeed, heading a successful socialist provincial government is a task not unlike that given Captain Bligh of HMS Bounty — the real enemy often turns out to be the crew.

The latest such attack on Schreyer came following a meeting of the provincial council of the Manitoba New Democratic Party last weekend. Party president Muriel Smith said many members of the NDP council believed Schreyer's government to be too defensive about its policies, too apologetic and generally lacklustre.

For Premier Schreyer and his cabinet colleagues, the pattern of attack was a familiar one. It appeared as a natural aftermath to two by-elections held this spring, when the NDP candidates, including a potential cabinet minister, ran third after the successful Conservatives and the runner-up Liberals.

The quarrel erupted on the front pages of both Winnipeg newspapers, and the premier countered by saying he had no regret at taking a stand in defence of sane, sensible ground, rather than "attacking belligerently."

Internal Attacks

Similar, internal attacks had been mounted against the government from party ranks when the premier and his cabinet decided to go ahead with a massive power development along the Nelson River, and found themselves facing the same native residents who had counted on NDP support in their earlier fight against eviction by the previous Conservative government.

Observers of the latest quarrel have noted a subtle difference this time around. For the first time, the premier, who has often talked about stepping down after eight years in office, has been asked officially to state his position as far as continuing as party leader is concerned.

Mrs. Smith, the party president, said there was nothing malicious in the request, that it was for information purposes only. But it did bring a response from Schreyer to the effect that if the party executive was not satisfied with his performance, they were free to choose another leader.

It is possible the present attack on the premier's moderation toward socialism could have its roots in the marked swing to the left in evidence at the NDP's national convention held in Winnipeg earlier this year.

But it could be based on a lack of practical political experience on the part of the NDP executive, compared to that gathered through six years in power by the party leader and members of his cabinet.

There has been little lack of socialistic activities by the government of Premier Schreyer. The party executive members who have issued the latest complaints say they do not quarrel with his policies, only the image of moderation that he promotes.

Many Manitobans who are not card-carrying members of the NDP believe that it is this image, and only the image, that gained and sustained Schreyer in power through two elections. In 1973 the party opted for posters which urged Manitobans to "re-elect Ed Schreyer's New Democrats," — posters which punctured the sensitive skins of incumbent opposition members who didn't appreciate running against newcomers whose literature urged voters to "re-elect" them.

In 1973, it was as if the premier were running in each of the province's 57 constituencies, and Schreyer's opponents are convinced that his image of moderation helped the party win a majority of these seats.

What the party executive wants Schreyer to do is start boasting about the socialist accomplishments of his government, but it is obvious that the premier believes such action would only help drive away the moderate support which helped him retain power.

During the six years of the Schreyer administration, Manitoba has had its share of socialist adventures. The private automobile insurance industry was replaced by a state-run institution which managed to boost the total insurance bill for Manitoba motorists from just over $36 million a year before the government stepped in to the business to an estimated $60 million during the current insurance period.

The Schreyer administration established a policy of buying, then leasing back agricultural land which has been successful to the point where close to 100,000 acres of Manitoba farm land is now government-owned. The final 20,000 acres of this came under government ownership in a three-month period, an action which indicated that the program was expanding.

Farmers took the opportunity of attending legislature committee hearings on land use to brand the government takeover as the single greatest threat to private land ownership in the province.

The Manitoba government has, within the past year, taken direct control of all milk production, and is planning to establish a government-owned processing plant which the present dairies say may force many of them out of business.

And in the field of business, the Schreyer government has poured more than $25 million into a government aircraft-building plant, more than $30 million into a bus-building operation, and has insured a market for the latter by telling the city of Winnipeg it will qualify for the 50-per-cent provincial transit subsidy only if it buys Manitoba-built buses.

Socialist Moves

It is the spectre of these socialist moves — all of which have been costly — that prevents the premier from attempting to present the higher public profile his party executive appears to be demanding. As a practical politician, he knows that one can boast of successes only at the risk of having failures brought forward by those in opposition.

But after six years in power, it is more than likely that some members of the Manitoba NDP have convinced themselves that the party, and not just Schreyer, was the people's choice in 1973, and that the party, shouting its socialist aims to the rooftops, could win in 1977, with or without Schreyer.

It is also likely that Schreyer and his colleagues who sit with him in the Manitoba legislature do not fully share this opinion, and are content to retain power through their image, a moderate one.

The insurance arm of the government has expanded into the general insurance field this year, and is using its established echelons of automobile agents to compete with private companies for fire, theft and liability insurance premiums.

Day and Night

One of the all-time favorite discussions which Victorians sharpen their verbal skills on is the domination of Canada by the U.S. For hours on end in such a discussion statistics are thrown about every which way, like cinders, spewing forth from a volcano, and like those erratic cinders those words of fact cool and remain docile until covered by more, with the great eruption of Canadianism.

The sharp light of morning brings reality to this discussion — the shape of buildings, the movements of a city and the American buck. We Victorians are an obsequious lot during business hours. Our charm is so sincere during the day but it's the night we relish when we can pull off our false faces and entertain each other with the quirks of Americans and the coarseness they seem born with. During the day though we are sweet. No wonder the Americans buy our land — who wouldn't if a whole country meets you with smiling faces and a laugh for whatever joke you tell?

An American must be shocked once he returns home and upon reading Time discovers that Canadians have a slight anti-Americanism about them. He would argue Time's conclusion and use all our smiling faces as evidence of our like for his people.

Pity the poor American who at night somehow finds his way into an Uplands home without the host being aware of his nationality and the conversation turns to American influence. I am sure that Americans would not want to buy land in our open and honest country. — W. Michael Faraday, 586 Beach Drive.

Do Unto Others...

I have been coming to Victoria, "second heaven," from Ontario for five years to drive Tally Ho horses. Last evening (Wednesday, Aug. 6) I had the misfortune of having one of the horses that I was driving slip and fall on the oily pavement at Cook and South Gate Streets. (Tally Ho horses wear rubber horse shoes.)

I want to congratulate the police department for the way in which the police officers took over the traffic situation. Also on the way they offered our U.S. visitors transportation to the Princess Marguerite ferry.

To close this episode, the passengers who were on the Tally Ho tour were the people that helped the little young man get back on the road with his horses. (May I say that they passed some remarks about the people of Victoria having so much to say but offering no help.) It was the passengers that were "visitors to the city of Victoria" who got their hands dirty to get Tally Ho moving again.

Letters

If the city of Victoria wishes to have tourists, let's help people who get into mishaps. Co-operate, citizens of Victoria. Some of you Victoria people might be on a holiday away from Victoria some day and would like co-operation if you run into a mishap. — Lloyd Evoy, 410 Kingston Street.

LONDON — The outskirts of London were raided last night by zeppelins which visited the eastern counties of England. Ten persons were killed and 56 persons were injured. One of the dirigibles is believed to have been hit. Aviators were active but owing to the difficult atmospheric conditions the zeppelins were able to escape. The latest raid on England is the third in a week. In the other two raids, 20 persons were killed, and last May 31, zeppelins dropped 90 bombs and killed four persons.

Slaughter of the Dolphins: Time to Call a Halt

By LEWIS REGENSTEIN

(Regenstein is executive vice-president of The Fund for Animals. This article is adapted from his new book on endangered species, The Politics of Extinction.)

Dolphins and porpoises have traditionally been known for their extraordinary intelligence, their seeming love for one another and their remarkable friendliness toward man. For centuries, stories have circulated of these mammals helping primitive peoples, living along rivers or coastal areas, to catch fish, with dolphins becoming an integral part of these fishing cultures. For instance, Pliny the Elder (A.D. 23-79) has described how ancient Greek or Gallic fishermen used dolphins to lead them to schools of fish and then shared their catch with these friendly cetaceans. According to him, the dolphins even waited in the area until the following day, to be rewarded for their efforts with bread dipped in wine.

The countless tales of dolphins co-operating with fishermen by chasing fish into their nets, once believed to be apocryphal, have now been confirmed by scientific observers. In 1878, J. Anderson described how certain Burmese villages along the Irrawaddy River each had their own "guardian dolphin" that "the fishermen believe purposely draws the fish into their nets." In 1954, "Natural History" carried a similar account, by B. F. Lamb, of the Tagapoos River Dolphin of South America. Lamb observed fishermen tapping on the side of their canoes and whistling for "their" dolphins, which appeared immediately after a miner's lamp was lit: "This same porpoise helped the fishermen in all their night fishing, scaring the fish from the deep water back to the shallows." Recently, Jacques Cousteau and his crew observed and filmed a coastal fishing tribe in Mauretania, Africa, that beats the ocean surface with sticks to attract dolphins, which in turn help drive schools of mullet into their nets.

U.S. tuna fishermen also use dolphins to catch fish, but they are wiping out these mammals in the process. The U.S. Pacific fleet first began killing dolphins on a large scale in the 1960s, when a new "purse-seine" method of netting yellowfin tuna came into widespread use. Being warm-blooded, air-breathing mammals, dolphins are found on the surface of the ocean, and some species often travel with the yellowfin tuna. The new fishing method involves the use of speed boats to spread huge nets around the schools of dolphins (or "porpoises") as they are called by the fishermen, which are then drawn in to land the tuna beneath the dolphins. When this happens, sometimes hundreds or even thousands of dolphins either drown or die of shock. Although most of them could jump out of the net and escape, they appear reluctant to abandon a fellow dolphin that is injured or in distress. Mothers in particular refuse to leave their infants, so often entire families remain huddled together in the net "whistling" sonar distress calls. By 1970, in just one area of the eastern tropical Pacific, an estimated 250,000 to 400,000 dolphins were being killed each year in this manner.

In order to put an end to the slaughter, Congress in 1972 passed, and the president signed, the Marine Mammal Protection Act. This law stated that its "immediate goal" was to reduce the incidental killing of dolphins "to insignificant levels approaching a zero mortality and serious injury rate," with a two year timetable for accomplishing this requirement. In addition, the law generally prohibits the issuing of a government permit for the killing of any "depleted" species. Over the protests of conservationists, the Commerce Department's National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS), headed by Robert W. Schoning, was given jurisdiction over the problem.

It is now obvious that the main dolphin species involved in this killing are so depleted as to be in actual danger of extinction. According to an October 1974 report compiled by the Federal Marine Mammal Commission (MCMC), the killing by 1974 was continuing at a rate of at least 100,000 dolphins a year, and some authorities feel that double that figure might be more accurate. (Since NMFS has refused to place observers on most of the tuna boats, these estimates are minimal and are probably much lower than the actual mortality.) The government report concluded that the killing "represents an unacceptably high level of mortality, both in terms of the specific change of the Marine Mammal Protection Act... and in terms of the overall protection and conservation policies and objectives of the act to maintain the health and stability of the marine ecosystem."

NMFS is well aware of what is happening to the dolphins. A 1974 study prepared by NMFS reports that one dolphin species — the so-called spinner porpoise (Stenella attenuata) — may be 30 per cent to 80 per cent lower than the pre-exploitation population in the early 1950s. The report indicates that other dolphins, such as the spinner porpoise (Stenella longirostris), are also in grave trouble; and the Marine Mammal Commission concluded in its study that "it is clear that mortality of both (these species) must be reduced significantly in order to ensure, with reasonable probability, the safety of the basic porpoise stocks."

Still NMFS Director Robert Schoning refuses to act to eliminate the slaughter. Under intense lobbying pressure, NMFS has issued rules and regulations largely designed to placate the powerful tuna industry, namely Ralston Purina, Star Kist, H. J. Heinz, Bumblebee Seafoods, and the American Tunaboat Association. The industry is represented in Washington, D.C. by the well-connected law firm of Covington & Burling, and by lobbyist George Steele. Besides violating the Marine Mammal Protection Act, NMFS is also in violation of the Endangered Species Act of 1973, which requires the agency to protect not only endangered species, but also any species that is "threatened" — "likely to become an endangered species within the foreseeable future throughout all or a significant portion of its range." Despite the overwhelming, incontrovertible evidence that these dolphins are moving toward extinction, none of them have been proposed for the threatened or endangered lists.

The yellowfin tuna caught by using dolphins accounts for only 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the tuna sold in the U.S. It is clear that the tuna-fishermen will soon have to stop setting nets on dolphins in any event, for they are rapidly running out of these remarkable creatures. In addition, Project Monitor, a coalition of conservation and environmental groups in Washington, D.C., headed by Col. Milton Kaufman, has filed suit through Environmental Defense Fund lawyer Richard Gutting, to force NMFS to halt substantially the killing and require government observers on the tuna boats to ensure that the law is adhered to.

In the meantime, greedy, shortsighted tuna fishermen are continuing to push these species of dolphins towards extinction, while indifferent government bureaucrats, with the responsibility for protecting them, look the other way.

The Dilemma Of Hostages

THE GLOBE AND MAIL

The seizure of 53 hostages by Japan Red Army terrorists in Kuala Lumpur, shocking as it was in itself, was more frightening still as part of an expanding pattern. The use of innocent lives as currency in crimes varying from political terrorism to bank robbery has become an international crime wave of a uniquely horrifying kind. It is a form of blackmail that exploits, not some secret guilt or shame, but the most decent of human instincts, the urge to preserve lives. It is a crime that arouses a public thirst for swift and savage retribution but frustrates it by putting up the lives of the hostages as a barrier.

So it is to be expected that we will hear frequent calls for the suppression of such kidnapping by the imposition of unusually severe penalties. The sense of outrage that inspires these proposals is natural. But outrage, however appropriate as an emotional response, is often a poor guide to wisdom in a dangerous crisis that imposes painful choices.

The most common — perhaps because it is the most instinctive — proposal for combating the taking of hostages is swift imposition of the death penalty on those convicted of it. The argument is that release of other terrorists, already in prison, is the most common demand of those who seize hostages and threaten, or take, their lives. So, it is argued, such terrorists should be given a brisk trial and a prompt hanging — then they will not be in jail to tempt other terrorists to take other hostages to bargain for their release.

Superficially logical as this proposition may appear at first glance, it stands up badly under a second look. Release of terrorist comrades is by no means the only demand of those who take hostages.

This vicious method has repeatedly been used by bank robbers. Should we impose a retrospective death sentence on all bank robbers now in prison in case their friends some day seize hostages to bargain for their release? Should we kill all members of terrorist organizations, even if they were convicted of comparatively minor crimes themselves, in case their comrades should make their release the subject of a kidnapping? Should we, in those countries where such a category exists, in law, kill all political prisoners? And, remembering that to some revolutionary groups all prisoners are political victims of the ruling class, should we kill every occupant of every prison cell?

No less obscene a bloodbath would do, if we seriously intended to do away with every prisoner whose release might be demanded by terrorists. And, even then, those whose real purpose is to inspire terror would find other pretexts for taking hostages.

In any event, to focus on penalty is to leap-frog the real dilemma: what of the hostages?

Here, too, glib formulas are unsatisfactory. The most commonly repeated formula is: never submit, even if the hostages must die; to yield now will only lead to more such terrorism and the loss of more lives.

But we cannot prove that argument, plausible as it may sound. We cannot know in advance that some unknown group of robbers or terrorists, in some unknown place and uncertain time in the future will be deterred by our decision today to sacrifice the lives of a specific group of individuals, or will even be aware of that decision. It would be a harsh society that could systematically sacrifice the lives of real and innocent people to preserve a principle the validity of which is not subject to proof.

Between submission to terrorism and the sacrifice of the hostages there is a third option to go in shooting, in the hope of saving some of the hostages while applying the greatest possible deterrent to seizure of hostages in the future.

The answer may be that there is no answer, no remedy, however courageous, hard-boiled or ferocious, that will end it all. The answer may be partly in special police, anti-terrorist teams, partly in a better application of psychology to mediation between kidnappers and authorities, partly in living in a much more security-conscious society, partly in exploring the social spawning grounds of such psychopathic crime, partly in dealing more harshly — much more harshly — with the countries that harbor terrorists.

THEY'RE TOO EAGER TO SERVE US

TORONTO STAR

It doesn't need Premier William Davis to tell us, as he did in a speech the other day, that Canada is over-governed. The proof stares the taxpayer in the face every time he opens a tax bill from the federal, provincial or municipal government. The three levels of government are competing rather than co-operating to run Canada.

The Canadian taxpayer supports an array of both federal and provincial missions abroad doing basically the same thing — trying to sell Canadian goods. He also pays for all 11 departments of labor and 11 health ministries. Ottawa has a ministry dealing with urban affairs and so do the provinces. In agriculture, too there are two competing levels of government service.

Some services such as social welfare are triplicated. Others are merely duplicated: The province and the cities fight, for example, over zoning and education; the province and Ottawa struggle over management of the economy.

But Davis is unconvincing when he suggests there is any simple solution. When he talks about sitting down with the federal prime minister and the premiers of the other provinces to make a common sense agreement on how to divide the responsibilities and the tax revenues, he sounds rather like the naive Pierre Trudeau of seven years ago.

Trudeau used to say Ottawa would mind its affairs and the provinces would mind theirs, and everything would be wrapped up in a neat new constitution.

But, no way. After years of painstaking negotiation, federal-provincial talks broke down. The federal-provincial struggle for supremacy resumed, with as much bitterness as ever.

The Quebec government is often blamed for this failure of the constitutional talks. And sometimes it does indeed demand a special status greater than that of other provinces which challenges legitimate federal power.

But Ottawa has often blundered into areas of provincial jurisdiction, and neither is Ontario without sin. It is ironic that on the very day Davis was calling for a simpler division of powers, his own government was being sued on the grounds that in removing sales tax from North American cars while leaving it on imports, it had usurped the federal authority over trade and commerce.

Trudeau has in fact written to Davis asking him to cancel the tax because it may contravene Canada's commitments to other countries under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Davis was closer to the truth when he said the man on the street demands service from governments without regard for the constitution, and that politicians seek to please. "Consequently there is, I would admit," said Davis delicately, "a tendency for all governments in the service of the people to become involved in areas which are not necessarily appropriate to them."

The truth is the British North America Act of 1867 which sought to divide responsibility between Ottawa and the provinces is hopelessly out of date. It has been replaced in practice by a system under which two or three levels of government overlap and then try to resolve their differences in scores of conferences which too often break down in partisan political bickering.

It will take big men of more than usual political stature in Ottawa and the provinces and cities, spurred on by outraged public opinion, to resolve the confusion — statesmen who are not always seeking to enlarge their empires and please some special public interest.

The Great French Exodus

By ROBIN SMYTH

PARIS — "When are you leaving?" a Paris butcher asked a customer as she paid her bill.

The question is routine in the last days of July as the French capital prepares for the great trek to the beaches.

"November," the young woman called out as she disappeared into the street. A startled silence fell on the queue of shoppers. As he trimmed a roast for the next in line, the butcher murmured with an air of deep perplexity "November?"

The conviction that August is the only possible holiday month is so deeply rooted in French minds that the planning and cajoling of successive governments have failed to make the slightest impact on it. This year the exodus from Paris and other cities in the first weekend of August was more than the usual outside happening — it was a near disaster.

One newspaper said that nothing quite like it had been seen since the flight from the invading Germans in 1940.

Determined not to miss a moment of their leisure month, 26 million people — counting the foreign tourist cars — took to the road within three days. The vast majority were aiming for the same strips of southern and western coastline, or for the Spanish frontier posts.

Despite the government's much publicized efforts to spread the vacation, more even over the summer months, the August weekend traffic was 20 per cent up over last year. The number of trailers, caravans and boats swinging in the wake of the cars had increased by about the same amount.

The southward and westward moving stream quickly congealed into traffic jams which were sometimes stationary for three hours together and in some places took 12 hours to move 60 miles.

To make matters worse, the wine-growers of Languedoc, who produce fiery table wine for an over-saturated market, blocked the main roads through their territory in protest against what they consider the unfair competition of cheap Italian wine.

Deaf to warnings that they were antagonizing just the people they most need to keep over to their cause, the wine-growers sealed roads with barricades of blazing car tires and showed a malicious joy in obstructing foreign tourist cars. One of their ploys, which had cars blundering round country roads late into the night was the removal or switching around of signposts at a crossroads.

In the daytime the relentless heat wave bore down on the slow-moving procession of cars, many of them packed tight with small children. In several places police and firemen had to come to the rescue of families trapped for hours without water or food.

Many people had to sleep in their parked cars by the roadside. When they could move, the frustrated drivers became so reckless that the accident toll almost doubled — 110 deaths this year as against 60 for the same weekend of 1974.

"For two days we have given a picture of a demented, violent, hostile society," protested the newspaper Journal de Dimanche.

Press commentators pointed out that no other country in Western Europe has such a totally irrational August holiday fixation.

Have the French at last taken enough punishment at the beginning of this month to change their habits? The immediate answer is not encouraging. While 60 per cent of French industries and businesses close down for August, their workers have no choice but to take off at the same time. Small firms close because the larger ones with which they do business have closed; shops put up their shutters because their customers have left.

This year part of the trouble was that August 1 fell on a Friday. The weekend coincided with the beginning of the month and everyone left home at the same moment. Next year, with August 1 on a Sunday, the forecast is that the situation will be even worse if measures are not taken at the highest level to space out the departures.

The worst omen is the resignation of the French holidaymakers themselves. They seem to take the discomfort of clogged roads and crowded beaches as an unavoidable part of the holiday ritual.

Le Figaro notes sadly that when August dawns the French lose their vaunted individualism. Behind the wheel of their immobilized cars they display "an astonishing resignation, a staggering fatalism."

Suit Contends Hughes Now Dead

NEW YORK (AP) — Two Manhattan stockholders have filed suit contending that Howard Hughes is dead.

If the elusive billionaire doesn't respond to their satisfaction, they intend to ask the courts to appoint an administrator for his estate. The civil complaint in New York state Supreme Court alleges that while Hughes is reputed to be residing at the Hotel Xanadu in the Grand Bahamas, he "has been dead for a considerable period" and is claimed to be alive "for the personal profit of various and sundry persons."

The suit was brought by Victor and Ellen Kurtz, minority stockholders of Air Liquidation Co., formerly known as Air West Inc., in which they seek from the company's stockholders damages of $100 million. Air West was taken over by Hughes in 1969.

The suit contends that Hughes and some of his associates deliberately depressed the price of the stock to make the sale of the airline to Hughes more attractive to stockholders. The American Stock Exchange is named as a defendant on grounds it did not take proper steps to disclose allegedly fraudulent manipulation of stock prices.

Also listed as defendants were Summa Corp., formerly Hughes Tool Co.; Chester Davis, chief legal counsel for Summa Corp.; and Haskins and Sells, a New York accounting firm.

Several suits are pending in federal court in San Francisco growing out of the Air West takeover by Hughes, including an anti-trust action brought by the Kurtzes. None of the federal court suits alleges that Hughes is dead.

The Kurtzes refer all questions about the New York case to their lawyer, Walton Bader. He contends that conspiracy is at the heart of the litigations involving Hughes and, "without Hughes, how can you prove a conspiracy?"

Hughes has been embroiled in litigation for about 15 years, including a prolonged battle in the 1960s for control of Trans World Airlines. He did not appear personally in that case, nor has he appeared in any of the litigation involving the Air West takeover.

Bader said if Hughes does not respond to the New York action he will press for appointment of an administrator for Hughes's estate to handle disposition of all the billionaire's assets.

"The man—as far as we know—has no children," Bader said. "We don't even know if there is a will. Nobody has seen him for 10 years or more. Unless it can be proved otherwise, he is either dead or incompetent and the burden of proof must rest with Mr. Hughes or those acting on his behalf."

When a reporter asked for comments on the contention in the Kurtz suit that Hughes is dead, a lawyer for the New York law firm of David Cox, which represents Hughes in the Air West federal proceedings, replied: "you're kidding."

The lawyer said any responses to suits would be made in court.

Amnesty Granted To 241 in Iran

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — The Shah of Iran today granted amnesty to 241 persons condemned by military tribunals.

They were being freed on the anniversary of the overthrow of former Premier Mohammed Mossadegh in 1953.

The Shah, who opposed Mossadegh, fled the country at one point when the premier was in power. He returned shortly after the premier's ouster.

'Send $50' Ad Said Misleading

A resident of London, England, has been warned by Michael Hanson, B.C.'s director of trade practices, that advertisements which he placed in B.C. newspapers could be construed as misleading.

The ad invited British Columbians to send $50 to learn "how to make money and beat inflation."

But in a letter to the advertiser, E. A. James of London, Hanson notes that those who replied to the ad received only "a collection of facts particularly inappropriate to Canadian use for it deals mostly with British legislation and a British background."

"The ordinary consumer would be forgiven if they concluded they were to receive some special secrets or more positive advice on how to make money for their $50, and can probably claim with some justification that the advertisement is misleading," Hanson states in the letter.

He points out that provincial law has been changed to permit action dealing with misleading or deceptive trade practices, and says if James plans any further advertising in B.C. the consumer services department would like to examine the ads in advance.

Hanson admitted that it is difficult to deal with such cases where the advertising originates from outside the country.

But he said he has sent a copy of his letter to all B.C. newspapers in the hope that "they will see the same potential element of deceptive advertising and realize that their 'good faith' defence would not hold up."

Hanson was referring to a recent amendment to the B.C. Trade Practices Act, which requires newspapers, radio and television stations to ensure that advertising copy is not misleading or deceptive before it is accepted for publication.

'No Place to Hide...'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate panel investigating U.S. intelligence agencies says the government has the technological capacity to impose "total tyranny" if a dictator ever came to power.

"There would be no place to hide," Senator Frank Church (Dem. Idaho) committee chairman, said Sunday on NBC's Meet the Press.

Church said the eavesdropping technology which intelligence agencies have given the government would enable it to impose total tyranny "and there would be no way to fight back because the most careful effort to combine together in resistance to the government, no matter how privately it was done, is within the reach of the government to know, such is the capability of this technology."

"We must see to it that (the CIA) and all agencies that possess this technology, operate within the law and under proper supervision so that we never cross that abyss," he said. "That's the abyss from which there is no return."

Church said that U.S. intelligence agencies, "in the need to develop a capacity to know what potential enemies are doing," perfected a "very extensive capability of intercepting messages wherever they may be in the airwaves."

"Now, that is necessary and important to the United States as we look abroad at enemies or potential enemies," he said.

"At the same time that capability at anytime could be turned around on the American people and no American would have any privacy left, such as... telephone conversations, telegrams, it doesn't matter."

'WON'T COST A CENT'

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Jean Drapeau told a national radio audience Sunday that he should be in a position "in about three months" to show the Canadian taxpayer that the 1976 Olympic games "won't cost them a cent."

Drapeau, who has maintained the Games would be self-financing, said experts were studying proposals to generate more revenue for the Games.

"Some of the ideas would cost more to implement than they could produce," he said, "but others are good, and perhaps in three months, I can reassure the pessimists."

The mood of the callers to the CBC openline program, Summer Switchboard, was mixed with almost equal amounts of abuse and praise from callers.

One caller, a woman from

Americans To Receive Security Aid

Thomas Deeney, manager of the United States Social Security Administration at Port Angeles, will visit Victoria Thursday to help Americans living on Vancouver Island with social security matters.

He will accept new applications for social security from 10:30 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. at the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service office, new Canadian Pacific Dock Building, 254 Belleville Street.

Residents of U.S. origin unable to meet Deeney can phone the social security office at Port Angeles.

LOUGHEED SITS OUT

CALGARY (CP) — The leadership issue was "low-keyed" at the western regional conference of the Progressive Conservative party's youth wing in Calgary during the weekend.

National leader Robert Stanfield and the provincial party leaders of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia attended the conference but Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed did not.

"In Lougheed's place, Inter-governmental Affairs Minister Lou Hyndman attended and spoke briefly on Alberta's intention to continue to fight for its jurisdiction over Alberta's energy resources."

Only one candidate in the leadership race showed up and tried to solicit the support of the young PCs, who are affiliated with the federal and provincial parties. The youth wing serves as a political training ground for its members, aged under 30 years.

"It is my wish to lead a party and a government that is progressive and humane in social policy, but truly conservative in economic, fiscal and monetary policy," said Howard Graftney, MP for the Quebec riding of Brome-Missisquoi.

Michael Meighen, national president of the party, said Sunday at the close of the conference that "more and more people are convinced" that Mr. Lougheed is not interested in Mr. Stanfield's job.

Stanfield, who will step down at the leadership convention next February, touched the leadership issue only lightly in his keynote address Saturday night.

And both Stanfield and Meighen warned the 230 delegates not to become narrow-minded and regionalized in their thinking.

"This party must not allow itself to be perceived as a party of narrow interest," Stanfield said. "Such a perception, whether it involves narrow regional interest or narrow economic group interest, would negate our role as a national party."

As Manitoba Tory leader Sidney Spivak put it, the Liberal government in Ottawa is treating Western Canada and the Maritime provinces as "colonies" and "sources of raw materials" for central Canada.

Which is why, Stanfield said, "we must convince great numbers of Canadians that hope for them lies in the first instance in a change to a Progressive Conservative government."

Meighen said in his opening address that the party should steer clear of "arch-conservatism" while trying to make a comeback from last year's defeat by the Liberals.

Calls for a return to capital punishment, freezes on government services and unrestricted free enterprise "do not constitute a positive political program," Neighen said.

Saskatchewan Tory leader Dick Colver said western Canada's long-term economic future depends on establishing an industrial base — but federal transportation policies and freight rates are working against western aspirations.

B.C. Tory leader Scott Wallace, the party's lone member in the legislature, spoke on his proposals for an income-earning society in B.C.

Wallace, who first announced his proposals two months ago, said the scheme would "guarantee, as a matter of right, a fair, stable and

Harassed, Say Scotts In FBI Hearst Search

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Lawyers for sports critic Jack Scott and his wife, Miki, say the FBI is subjecting the couple to massive harassment in its search for fugitive newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst.

The constant surveillance became so severe earlier this year that the couple hid from federal agents between Feb. 27 and April 10, the Scotts charged in legal briefs.

The papers were filed by the Scotts' lawyers in preparation for a hearing today in U.S. District Court. The Scotts are trying to quash subpoenas ordering their appearance before a federal grand jury investigating the harboring of Miss Hearst.

Mrs. Scott offered sworn statements of several incidents that she said constituted FBI harassment. She said last July 30 she called a Portland record shop to order tickets for a concert and told the salesperson she would be right over. When she and her husband arrived, federal agents served them with subpoenas.

To the best of my knowledge, these agents did not follow us to the record store — they were waiting there for us when we arrived," Mrs. Scott said. "I believe that the only way they could have known where we were going was to have monitored my telephone conversation with the salesperson at the record store."

The Scotts also charge "the exploitation of the physical ailments and emotional instability of Jack's brother, Walter Scott, in order to intimidate and terrorize him into falsely accusing the witnesses, their family and friends of a variety of criminal acts."

Walter Scott, who had earlier accused his family of aiding Miss Hearst and then offering to turn her in for $100,000, told the Associated Press on Friday he would no longer co-operate with the government. He denied charges by his family that he is an alcoholic and psychopathic liar.

LOBSTER, CRAB ON SOVIET SHIP

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Coast Guard held a Soviet trawler here today after boarding parties scoured nine Soviet fishing vessels and found 25 pounds of protected lobster and crab on board the impounded ship.

A coast guard spokesman said Nikolai Ivanovich Nikonov, master of the 247-foot stern trawler Zoraysk, was to be arraigned today for illegally taking the catch from the continental shelf.

The Zoraysk was seized Sunday about 80 miles east of Atlantic City, N.J.

The seizure was the sixth this year since the U.S. government stepped up enforcement of the Continental Shelf Resource Law, which protects U.S. northern lobster, deep-sea crab, stone crab and other marine life for American fishermen.

Although the U.S. observes a 12-mile limit, the law protects marine life on the underwater shelf, which at some points extends 200 miles into the Atlantic.

Picnic Tables, Toilets Taken

Roadside picnic tables set up for the convenience of motorists stalled in Swartz Bay ferry lineups have been removed after some complaints and abuses were noted, the highways department said.

Tables and portable chemical toilets were placed along the grass median of Patricia Bay Highway near McDonald Bay Road in May and the tables were removed in mid-July on instructions from the highway minister's office.

Originally, the highways department acted on requests by the ferry authority which during holiday seasons has had to cope with miles-long lines of waiting traffic.

Those stuck in lineups for anything from one to six hours had no access to comfort stations unless they were parked within short walking distance of the terminal. They couldn't leave cars unattended because from time to time the waiting lines would move.

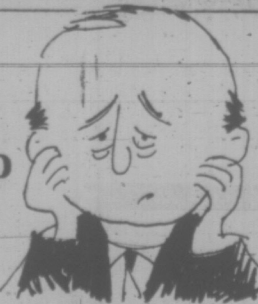

But the picnic tables apparently encouraged other people to leave their cars and picnic by the wayside, possibly creating a traffic hazard.

Some complaints were directed at people who were seen throwing stones at waterfowl in the adjoining Tselum Harbor, a bird sanctuary, some to the fact that late-night users were rowdy and disturbed nearby residents.

A highways spokesman said it was "in the interests of the travelling public to have the tables there — along with portable chemical toilets." But the combination of abuse and complaints was overruling.

New Bangladesh Leader Facing Formidable Woes

HONG KONG — The coup d'état which took the life of Bangladesh President Sheikh Mujib Rahman and his authoritarian regime Friday morning is not likely to heal the misery of the beleaguered young nation.

Certainly, Mujib did not have the answers to the overwhelming problems that have plagued his country since its birth 3 1/2 years ago. But there is no reason to believe that the new government which apparently is led by pro-Western military officers and civil servants, has the answers either.

The problems facing Bangladesh may very well be insoluble: too many people and too little food. Added to this is the country's unfortunate location between the hills of northeastern India and the Bay of Bengal, making it a crossroads for frequent floods and cyclones.

Since Bangladesh was wrested from Pakistan by India in a brief war in 1971 following nine months of bloody insurrection, it has never been able to struggle to its feet—or even to its knees.

A good argument can be made that Mujib, as the 55-year-old paternalistic leader of 72 million people did nothing to relieve the endless crisis.

For one thing, he was virtually incapable of being an administrator. He reached political maturity as a brawling, sloganeering, wardheel, always in the opposition, never in public office.

When he returned to Dacca, the fledgling capital of the newborn nation in January 1972, he had not the slightest idea of how to run a government. For months, the doors to his large but sparsely furnished bungalow in the Dhanmandi section of Dacca were never closed.

Day and night, he received supplicants in whatever room of the house he happened to be in at the moment, dispensing favors like a feudal landlord.

By the time he posted armed guards at his gates, the pattern that was to dog Mujib for the remainder of his life was well established. Not even the simplest administrative decision could be made without Mujib's personal involvement. Old political cronies from his ruling Awami League were in charge of the most lucrative ministries and departments. The government bogged down in a seemingly bottomless quagmire of inefficiency and corruption.

In time, Mujib himself became stained with the tar brush of corruption, although the overwhelming majority of Bengalis continued to revere him as the father of the nation and the "Bangabandhu," or friend of Bengal, until the end.

Mujib was not hard to like. A large, effusive man with a ready smile and an engaging manner, he easily swept up huge crowds with his rousing Bengali oratory. Western newsmen covering his return to Dacca from imprisonment in Pakistan found themselves infected by his charisma as he called on those he loved to describe as "my people" to "give me three years" to make Bangladesh a going concern.

Only the most cynical observers could have guessed then that he would fall objectly and end up a victim of his own army.

But as Bangladesh quickly turned sour, Mujib thought himself misunderstood by critical reports in Western journals. Embittered by even the most discreet criticism abroad and at home, he withdrew from his people and eventually became reclusive.

venturing out of Dacca only under massive security.

He aged perceptibly in the last few years, his slick gray hair and bushy mustache fading and his waist thickening.

More than any other of his numerous shortcomings, Mujib failed to recognize that he had allowed himself to be surrounded by corruption that led to this assassination.

Foreign government, led by the United States, and international organizations contributed $3 billion in economic assistance to Bangladesh. The donors watched patiently for nearly three years as the funds were siphoned off. Carefully planned development projects gathered dust in shabby bureaucratic offices. Top officials seemed uninterested in spending vast sums of money except to enhance their personal fortunes.

Toward the end of last year, official corruption reached such widespread proportions that politicians and government representatives became frequent targets for robbery, assault and murder by disgruntled peasants and bitter youths who had fought as guerrillas against the ruthless Pakistan army.

Aid donors prevailed on Mujib to take some meaningful action to clean up his government. On Dec. 28, Mujib declared a state of emergency. Armed with the special powers, he uprooted some of Dacca's most squalid slums, in an effort to impress visiting dignitaries from aid-giving organizations, and dumped thousands of hapless slum dwellers in refugee-like camps where they were unable to earn a living.

Then, on Jan. 25, Mujib gave up his title of prime minister and became president, making Bangladesh a one-party state and himself its effective dictator. It was a desperate move, but the people of Bangladesh had been forced to desperation by runaway inflation and hunger. Many Bengalis greeted the news of a tough system with tenuous hope.

I was in Bangladesh at the time and dozens of peasants and townspeople told me that this was what was needed. "Now prices will come down, and there will be more food for everyone," an old man in a tiny village north of Dacca told me in what was a typical assertion.

But President Mujib proved no more efficient or capable than Prime Minister Mujib. He refused to deal seriously with the strangulating effect of population growth—two million new mouths to feed each year—because it was politically sensitive.

Suit Filed In Aerosol Death

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A suit filed in U.S. district court here asks $750,000 damages for the death of a California teenager who allegedly died as a result of inhaling an aerosol kitchen product.

The suit says Robert William Jacobs died on Aug. 15, 1974, in Sacramento, Calif., at the age of 15, after inhaling the contents of a can of Pam, a spray product used to prevent food from sticking to pots. (The product is also sold in Victoria food stores)

The suit says Pam "has been linked to at least 125 deaths" during the last six years.

Defendants are American Home Products Corp., which manufactures Pam, and Boyle-Midway, Inc., which distributes it.

Portland lawyer Nick Chai-voe says the suit was filed in Oregon in order to get a speedier trial and because he anticipated filing similar actions on behalf of Oregon clients.

Meanwhile, Mujib was giving increasing powers to a paramilitary force known as the Raksh Bahini, which took orders directly from him and used terror against the president's enemies and opponents.

This caused dissension in the regular army, particularly among its young officers.

Although it is not yet clear from the scanty news seeping out of Dacca who led Friday's dawn coup, it appears that a young officer who was reportedly a hero of the struggle against Pakistan, Major Dalim, played a key role.

In announcing the coup over Bangladesh radio, Dalim specifically called on members of the Raksh Bahini as well as border security forces and police to turn themselves in to the army.

The radio announcement also declared that the new president is Commerce Minister Khondkar Mustaghe Ahmed, a 57-year-old attorney who is considered pro-Western in general and pro-American in particular.

The introduction of a Bangladesh government favorable to the United States could prove provocative in South Asia, especially in India.

Until Mujib was assassinated, Bangladesh, like India, was a friend of the Soviet Union and not with the United States, despite Washington's massive aid contribution.

The toppling of Mujib and his government is certain to cause grave concern to Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. Mrs. Gandhi, who came under criticism in New Delhi for swiftly congratulating Mujib when he took dictatorial control of Bangladesh, recently has imposed similar constraints in her own country.

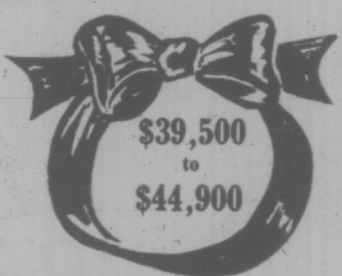

Although the Indian government vehemently denies it, the prime minister is also known to be worried about antagonism within the massive Indian army to her refusal to leave office after being convicted of corrupt election practices.

Whether the Indian army will take its cue from Bangladesh remains to be seen. India's armed forces have a long and proud tradition of remaining out of politics.

A number of opponents of Mrs. Gandhi have been claiming that they would be able to launch moves to force her out of office in six or eight months. Mujib fell seven months after he tightened his grip.

3 Killed In Canyon Accident

YALE (CP) — Three persons were killed Saturday in a four-vehicle accident one mile north of this Fraser Canyon town.

RCMP said two persons in a southbound vehicle were killed and one person in a northbound vehicle also died in the accident.

No names were released. It was the second fatal accident on the Fraser Canyon stretch of the Trans-Canada Highway in two days. Two persons were killed Friday in a three-vehicle accident 10 miles west of Hope. Their names have not been released either.

Elsewhere in Canada, five persons killed in a light aircraft crash in Didsbury, Alta., among at least 85 persons who died accidentally during the weekend. A survey from 6 p.m. Friday to midnight Sunday night local times showed 61 traffic fatalities, three fire deaths, 13 drownings, and seven persons who died in two separate plane crashes.

Tortured Major Testifies

ATHENS (AP) — A retired major, left semi-paralyzed and speechless from torture, burst into tears and groans in a courtroom today as he bared his body to show wounds inflicted on him during the former Greek dictatorship.

Unable to speak, 50-year-old Spyridon Moustakidis sat on a chair before the court, removed his shirt and with grunts and gestures went through beating movements and pointed to the scars still visible on his body. The right part of his body shook, and he occasionally uttered an obscenity.

Moustakidis, reputed to be the worst torture victim of the dictatorship that crumbled last summer, appeared at the trial of 31 men accused of torturing political opponents of the regime.

Police were brought forward in the courtroom to calm down the emotionally overwhelmed Moustakidis. His wife made an initial statement on his behalf, describing Moustakidis' arrest in May, 1973, after an abortive naval counter-coup against the regime. She said when she was eventually allowed to see her husband three months later he was "a living corpse, a body with no brain, a human plant."

"The horror lives on with us," she said. "We have a little girl who has never heard her father's voice, who will never feel the warmth of his hand's caress." Moustakidis had insisted on testifying by jumping up in court with tears streaming down his face and thumping his fist on the bench to gain attention.

The sport of lacrosse was on display to three international volleyball teams Sunday night at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

"It's a very rugged game and I am impressed very much by the stamina of the players," said Shiro Nakamura, head coach of the Japanese national junior men's team.

The other clubs among the 1,504 fans at the arena were the U.S. men's and Japanese women's squads. All three were in Victoria for the Pacific Rim junior tournament which ended Saturday.

For the most of them it was their first glimpse of lacrosse

Esquimalt Captures B.C. Title

VANCOUVER — Esquimalt staged a furious third-period rally to defeat Richmond Roadrunners 15-11 Sunday for the B.C. Junior 'B' Lacrosse championship.

Behind 10-8 going into the final 20 minutes, Esquimalt outscored its opposition 7-1 in the final period to take the title. Richmond led 5-4 after the opening period.

Rick Lapointe led the winners with three goals and two assists while Steve Buckley, Scott Browning and Lance Hobbs had two goals apiece. Singles came from Kevin Kennedy, John Entzinger, Bob Derrough, Brian McKinnon, Randy Bryant and Kim Browning, who also had five assists.

Mike Colmant and Dave Edinger each had two goals and two assists for the Roadrunners.

Richmond made it to the final of the four-team tournament by downing Prince George 15-11 Saturday while Esquimalt downed Burnaby 16-10.

Kennedy, Buckley and Kim and Scott Browning each fired two goals to pace the island squad to its triumph.

The B.C. title now qualifies Esquimalt for the Canadian junior "B" tournament Sept. 2-7 in Edmonton.

and had it not been for Norm Baker and Kevin Alexander it might have been an evening poorly spent.

The talented Victoria duo provided most of the skill as McDonald's downed Richmond Roadrunners 13-6 to take a 2-1 edge in their best-of-seven Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League semi-final.

Saturday, the Roadrunners beat the visiting Bakers 14-12 despite three goals by Baker and two by Alexander.

In the other series Sunday, Burnaby took a 3-0 lead against New Westminster with a 17-9 triumph over the visiting Salmonbellies.

With their passing and shooting, Baker and Alexander were easily the top attractions of Sunday's game, one prolonged by long discussions between players and officials.

The two provided the Bakers with 10 of their 13 goals. Baker was the more prolific with six goals and four assists while Alexander, the league scoring champion with a record 207 points, had four goals and five assists.

Victoria led 4-2 after the first period with three of those goals coming from Baker and the other from Alexander.

In the second period, Richmond goalie John Lewis blanked Baker but Alexander scored twice to spark the McDonalds to an 8-6 edge going into the final 20 minutes.

Baker had three goals and Alexander one goal and three assists in the third period as Victoria outscored the visitors 5-4 to take the victory.

Leigh Hegon, Roy Sinden and junior "B" callup Tei-Lahh were the other marksmen for the McDonalds.

Bob Karl scored twice to top the Roadrunners while Frank Nielsen, Gord Quilty and Rico Bellucci had one goal apiece.

John Lewis was busy in the Richmond goal for the third straight game as he blocked 48 shots. Al Radley and Mickey Michaux, who played in the final period, combined for 34 saves for Victoria.

Fourth game in the series is Tuesday in Richmond with the fifth back here Thursday.

In Burnaby's victory, Kelly McLennaghan and John Kregovich each scored four times for the winners with Dan Wilson, Randy Delmonico and Mike McLennaghan adding two goals apiece.

REGINA — British Columbia athletes, with a big assist from Victoria gymnasts and archers completed their run-away victory in the Western Canada Summer Games Sunday.

Philip Delesalle, 16, of Victoria emerged as the games' biggest individual winner with five of a possible six gold medals in gymnastics. He won the parallel bars, high bar, floor exercises, pommel horse, rings and all-around. The only event he failed to win was vaulting, where he finished fourth with 17.55 points.

His winning point totals were 18.45 in high bar, 18.50 in parallel bars, 18.20 in floor exercises, 18.55 in pommel horse and 18.15 in rings.

Two other Victoria gymnasts and one from Nanaimo also placed well. Karen Kelsall of Nanaimo won the women's floor exercises with 17.10 points, tied for second in vaulting with 16.35 points and was fifth in uneven bars with 16.15 points.

Kym Gordon of Victoria was third in balance beam with 15.55 points and fourth in uneven bars with 16.40. Jill Weinberg of Victoria was second in uneven bars with 16.70 and fourth in vaulting with 16.30.

Victoria competitors swept the first four places in women's archery, won by Wanda Allan with 2,199 points. Marj Saunders was second with 2,171 followed by Gerry Cosgrove with 2,138 and Dorothy Lidstone with 2,134. Chris Barman of Victoria was sixth in men's archery.

A Vancouver Island rower, Brad Pettenger of Tofino, teamed with Vancouver's John Yexxa to win a gold medal in pairs without cox, timing in 3:47.5.

Pettenger and Yexxa joined Patrick Walker of Chilliwack and Marius Felix of Victoria to place second in fours with cox, five seconds behind winning Alberta which had a clocking of 3:25.6.

Weightlifter John Swan of Victoria was second in the lightweight class with 232.5, which was 40 behind winner Chris Darloves of Seattle, who was competing for B.C.

B.C. swimmers dominated in the pool with 23 gold medals. Karen Rushall of Victoria placed third in the women's 100-metre butterfly in 1:37.39 and Alison Noble of Victoria was sixth in the women's 200-metre backstroke.

B.C. wrestlers captured five freestyle gold medals Sunday, including one to Victoria's Mike Richey in the 165-pound class.

B.C. athletes ended up with 113 gold medals compared to 33 for second-place Alberta, and 16 each for Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

In team-event points, with winning provinces in each sport awarded four points, B.C. had 83.5, Alberta 68.5, Manitoba 48 and Saskatchewan 40.

Despite massive headaches involved in organizing the week-long games for 1,492 athletes in 23 sports, officials were hopeful that another Western Canada Games could be held in 1979. There was widespread speculation that Victoria would be the site. No decision has been made regarding the games' future, however.

Persistent Pauline Just Pitched In

Pauline Elliott's display of endurance Sunday sparked Nanaimo to the B.C. junior women's softball championship at Bullen Park.

The husky pitcher allowed only 19 hits over 28 innings as she hurled four straight games for Nanaimo.

Her finest performance came in the final against Burnaby. In that one, she gave up only two singles as Nanaimo won the crown 4-0.

Nanaimo forced the final game of the double-knockout tournament by beating Burnaby 15-0 on a three-hitter by Miss Elliott.

In its earlier games, Nanaimo trimmed Richmond 5-1 and lost 3-0 to Burnaby.

Esquimalt, which represented the province at the Canadian tournament earlier this month, was eliminated 15-8 by Richmond in the first game of the day.

Saturday, Esquimalt split its two games, losing 4-2 to Burnaby and beating Surrey 7-5.

In the other contests, Nanaimo slammed Surrey 8-4 and Burnaby edged Richmond 6-4.

Old Routine Suits 'Rocks

Victoria Shamrocks and Coquitlam Adanacs went through their same old routine at Memorial Arena once again Saturday night.

The Irish wound up winners over the Adanacs for the fifth time in as many Western Lacrosse Association outings this season in Victoria.

This time it was an 18-11 decision and it gave the Shamrocks a 2-1 edge in their best-of-five semi-final. The fourth game takes place tonight in Coquitlam.

In the other playoff, Vancouver Burrards took a 2-1 lead in their series against the Salmonbellies with a 12-9 win Saturday in New Westminster.

The two teams meet in the fourth game Wednesday at Richmond, where the Burrards have played all their semi-final home games.

Only three Victoria performers managed more than one goal Saturday against the Coquitlam goaltending duo of Darryl Sauve and Dan Bartsch.

Charm Dhillon, who finished tied for fifth in league scoring, fired three goals while team captain Ranjit Dhillon, tied for eighth in scoring, had two goals and two assists.

The other Shamrock with more than one goal was rookie Mike Walsh, who enjoyed his most prolific game with Victoria with four goals and two assists.

The lanky Walsh led his club to an 8-6 first-period lead with a goal and two assists. He added another in the middle period as the Irish boosted their edge to 13-9.

And it was his two goals at the start of the third period that completely deflated the Coquitlam attack and gave the Shamrocks control of the contest until the final buzzer.

The four goals gave Walsh six for the three playoff encounters, a far cry from the last half of the regular season when he scored just four times in 12 games.

Rhys Parsons topped the Adanacs with three goals while junior recruit Joe Jamieson, with two, was the only other Coquitlam player to beat Victoria goalie George Grover more than once.

Ron Pinder led the Burrards to their win with three goals and two assists with Bill Rawson and Gord Fredericksen adding a pair each. Singles came from Steve Matheson, Mike Smith, Ward Sanderson, Dan Cameron and Bob Salt.

John Gamble scored three times for New Westminster while Larry Henry had two. Bill Robinson, Steve d'Easum, John Hannah and Brian Buchanan had one goal apiece.

Gamble joined the Salmonbellies from the Port Coquitlam senior "B" club as six New Westminster regulars were not able to dress for the game.

LBC GAINS SOCCER SHOWDOWN

WINNIPEG — London Boxing Club of Victoria advanced to the Canadian soccer championship tournament in Calgary by defeating Winnipeg Thistles 3-1 Sunday.

Boxing Club meets an Edmonton Ital-Canadians and two eastern clubs in the four-team, single-elimination tournament starting with a semi-final this Saturday. A win would put Victoria into Sunday's final.

A Solid Second Half Leaves Dolphins Short

Victoria Dolphins discovered Sunday that it takes more than one good half to win a football game.

Behind 20-0 at the half against Vancouver Blue Bombers, the Dolphins rallied in the second 30 minutes but still lost 22-15 before a crowd of about 350 at Royal Athletic Park.

The loss was the third in as many Big Four Football Conference outings for the Dolphins this season while the victory squared the Blue Bombers' record at one win and one loss.

A 30-yard interception return by defensive halfback Doug Milnes produced Bombers' first touchdown. Brian Moody booted the convert and added a 22-yard field goal in the opening quarter.

Vancouver added another 10 points in the second quarter on a 15-yard touchdown catch by Ellis Miyashita and a convert and 13-yard field goal by Moody.

Bombers' other points came midway through the third quarter on a safety touch. After that it was all Victoria.

Dolphins scored both their touchdowns through the air. Starting quarterback Spence Parker hit halfback Leon Mitchell for a six-yard major in the third quarter and reliever Tom Sullivan and end Brad Tripp combined for an 84-yard pass-and-run in the final quarter.

Theo Vanderberg converted Mitchell's touchdown while Tripp caught a Sullivan pass for a two-point conversion after his major.

Dolphins also lost the services of defensive halfback Kerry Lacroix late in the game when he sustained a suspected broken shoulder.

Racing Comeback Ends in Crash

Early last year Mark Donohue said he would never again drive in an automobile race.

Today, the Pennsylvania driver who included a triumph in the 1971 Indianapolis 500 among his 50 major victories, is recuperating in an Austrian hospital following surgery for a blood clot on the brain.

He was reported out of danger, but hospital doctors were forbidden to make any other statements on the condition of Donohue, who crashed during a practice lap before Sunday's start of the Austrian Grand Prix at Zellweger. Two track guards were also seriously injured in the mishap.

Italian Vittorio Brambilla won the race, halted after 29 laps because of dangerous conditions.

of the car-racing circuits was fatally injured Sunday in a six-machine collision minutes after the start of the Talladega 500 stock-car race in Alabama.

Tiny Lund, 43, was killed in that pileup and four other drivers suffered minor injuries in a series of other crashes that damaged 11 of the 50 automobiles in the $156,000 event.

Buddy Baker edged Richard Petty by three feet for the victory, worth $24,000. Donnie Allison was third.

Tour Title Clinched By Alberta Triumph

CALGARY (CP) — Bob Panasiuk of Windsor, Ont., fired a closing-round even-par 71 Sunday to win his second straight Alberta Open golf championship by two shots on the soggy, 6,551-yard Earl Grey Golf Club course.

Panasuk finished at 209, four-under-par, for the 54-hole event, ahead of Saskatchewan Open champ Greg Pidlaski of Thornhill, Ont., and Dave Barr of Kelowna, who each finished at 211.

Pidlaski shot a four-under-par 67 in the final round while Barr posted a 70.

Victory was worth $2,900 to Panasiuk, the biggest winner ever on the Peter Jackson Canadian golf tour. It was his second win of the season and increased his total winnings to $10,000. The tour-ending B.C. Open is scheduled for this weekend at Vancouver.

"It was nice playing with the guy who was closest to me," said Panasiuk, who played the last round with Barr, a two-year man on the tour. "He (Barr) was in a position where he had to come from behind. I was able to concentrate on playing the golf course."

Panasuk made three birdies on putts of 10, 18 and 30 feet, but also bogeyed three times.

Panasuk, who won this tournament by four strokes last year in Edmonton, shot rounds of 68, 70 and 71 for the triumph that assured him an additional $1,000 as point champion on the Canadian tour.

Barr and Pidlaski were the only other contestants to break par in two of the three rounds.

John Morgan of Victoria missed the 38-hole cut after following an opening-round 78 with an 81 Saturday.

Pidlaski, who had four birdies on the front nine and another on the 18th with a 12-foot putt to offset a bogey on the 10th hole, said he was more aggressive in the last round.

PAIR OF EAGLES LEAD TO VICTORY

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — JoAnn Washam turned in the best three-round performance of the 1975 U.S. Ladies' Professional Golf Association tour, firing a 68 Sunday to win the Patty Berg golf tournament by four strokes.

The third-year pro from Fort Worth, Tex., eagled the third and seventh holes on the front side en route to a 13-under-par 206 at the 6,000-yard Keller golf course. She matched 69s on the first two days and became the first LPGA player in two years to string together three successive rounds under 70.

Defending champion JoAnne Carner and Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan Falls, Que., tied for second at 210 and each collected $4,100. Joyce Kazmierski was alone at 211.

First-prize cheque in the $45,000 event totalled $6,400.

Mrs. Carner fired a three-under 70 and Miss Bourassa a 69 in the final round.

Judy Rankin, Carol Mann and Sandra Palmer finished in a tie at 212.

Sizzling Finish Lured Fans

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — Fans were generally scarce when Jim Nelford competed in the first three rounds of the Canadian men's Amateur golf championship.

After all, Doug Roxburgh of Vancouver, Gary Cowan of Kitchener, Ont., and Nick Westlock of Burlington, Ont., were favored to lead the 72-hole tournament.

Nelford, from Burnaby, B.C., stuck close to the leaders for the first three days, then fired a brilliant four-under-par 67 in the final round Saturday to take the 71st Amateur by four strokes over Roxburgh, the defending champion.

Nelford, 20, attracted a gallery of about 2,000 on the 6,244-yard Riverside Country Club course when he erased a three-stroke deficit after the third round with a par-36 on the front nine.

He burned up the course on the back nine with two eagles and a birdie for a four-under 31 and a 280 total for the four days.

Roxburgh fired a 72 for 284, one better than Cowan who had a 74 for 285.

Robbie Jackson of Montreal, the third-round leader with a 210, blew to a 77 for a 287 and fourth place.

"I guess it was sort of a help to be behind the leaders early in the tournament," said Nelford. "I wasn't faced with that much pressure because the fans were following the other guys."

Jackson, who plays out of the Royal Montreal Golf Club in Ile Bizard, Que., was the big attraction Friday with a five-under-par 31 on the front nine and a 37 on the back for a 68 which gave him the lead.

Nelford, who attends Brigham Young University on a golf scholarship, clinched the title with a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th, a par-three, 200-yarder.

He held a four-stroke lead over Cowan and Roxburgh entering the 17th hole and picked up a par to maintain that advantage. Roxburgh also parred the 17th but Cowan, the 1961 winner and five times a runner-up, had a double-bogey on the 285-yard hole.

Nelford's first eagle came on a 14-foot putt at the par-five, 482-yard 14th and his second came on the par-four, 240-yard 15th, where his nine-iron second shot rolled into the hole.

At 294 were Dave Webber of Dartmouth, N.S., with a 75, and Cec Ferguson of Victoria, with a 72. Kelly Roberts of London, Ont., was ninth with 295.

Harper in Front

CHEMUNUS — Sandy Harper of Nanaimo, expected to be among the main contenders in the Canadian junior golf championship tournament later this month at Victoria's Gorge Vale course, chalked up a six-stroke victory Saturday.

Last year's provincial junior king, Harper took the title in the annual Mount Brenton junior championship event with a 106 total for the 27 holes.

Ian Hyde-Lay of Cowichan was second at 112, followed by Russ Reynolds of Victoria (113) and Aren Fredrickson of Nanaimo (117).

Kevin Mitchell of the Mount

Brenton club set the pace in the under-16 division, finishing at 113 for a one-shot margin over Victoria's Jim Rutledge, the defending champion who is an alternate on the B.C. team for the Canadian tourney.

In an 18-hole handicap competition, Bruce Lewis of Comox won the 0-10 handicap division with a net 68 and Brian Martins of Cowichan posted a net 70 to lead golfers with handicaps of 11 to 18.

Dawn Coe of March Meadows fired an 18-hole score of 92 to win the girls' title and Ann Newman of Campbell River was the handicap leader with a net 77.

At Last, Bies Believes

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Frustration, failure and disappointment came to an end Sunday for Don Bies when he rolled in a six-foot birdie putt on the second playoff hole and beat Hubert Green for the $40,000 first prize in the Greater Hartford open golf tournament.

"I couldn't believe it when the putt went in the hole and I was a winner," Bies said.

Bies, who joined the tour almost by accident eight years ago, had won a lot of money but nothing else in his pro career. At 37, he may be the oldest first-time winner ever. The records don't show.

"I thought I might never win," Bies said. "I've played reasonably good over the years. I've been in contention before."

"About half those times, when I was in contention, I played pretty good. It wasn't like I was choking all the time. Sometimes the putts just wouldn't fall. Sometimes somebody just played better than I did."

To win Sunday's tournament, he first had to make a 20-foot birdie putt on the 71st hole to regain a share of the top spot and force the playoff.

He had to make a nerve-testing, six-foot par-saving putt to stay alive on the first playoff hole.

And he had to make another six-footer on the second hole to win it.

Bies led by three strokes at one time in the final round, watched the margin fade and disappear, then reclaimed a share of it with the critical birdie on the 11th.

It helped give him a final round of 69 and a 267 total, 11 under par on the 6,560-yard Wethersfield Country Club course.

Green, a four-time winner last season but in a slump most of this year, birdied two of his last three holes in regulation for a 68 that forced the playoff.

Actually, it was a four-man race down the stretch. J.C. Snead needed only a par on the last hole to gain a playoff spot. But he bogeyed it, missing the green from a flying lie in the rough.

Larry Nelson had a 10-to-12 foot birdie putt on the last

Snead, who barged into contention with four birdies in a row over one stretch, finished with a 67-268, one shot back. Nelson's 69-269 was two back and put him in a tie with Victor Regalado, who had a last-round 67.

Now It's Pirates' Turn

Times News Service
The frustration is over for Detroit Tigers but it's getting worse for Pittsburgh Pirates.
The Pirates, who Saturday suspended pitcher Dock Ellis indefinitely for what general manager Joe Brown termed "insubordination," lost their sixth in a row Sunday, 3-1 to Cincinnati Reds.

O.C. CRICKET

LONDON (CP) — Results of John Player Sunday League cricket matches of 40 overs.

Nottinghamshire beat Leicestershire by six wickets. Leicestershire 111 all out after 39.4 overs; Nottinghamshire 115 for four after 30.5 overs.
Worcestershire beat Warwickshire by 79 runs. Worcestershire 245 for seven after 39 overs, innings closed; Warwickshire 166 all out after 32.2 overs.

Hampshire beat Northamptonshire by nine wickets after 10 overs. Northamptonshire 47 for eight after eight overs.
Kent beat Glamorgan by 17 runs. Kent 203 for nine innings closed; Glamorgan 186 all out after 29.1 overs.

That left the Pirates only a half-game ahead of Philadelphia Phillies, who trampled San Diego Padres 10-4, and two up on St. Louis Cardinals, 8-1 winners over Atlanta Braves, in the frantic National League Eastern Division baseball race.

Ellis was fined and suspended after he refused to warm up for Friday's game which Pittsburgh lost 8-3 to Cincinnati. He was told by Brown that he will remain suspended — without pay — until he expresses a willingness to do what field manager Danny Murtaugh orders.

As for the Tigers, they came within one game of tying the American League record for consecutive losses at 19, but ended it right there with a pair of weekend shut-outs over California Angels. They won 8-0 Saturday and 7-0 Sunday.

ONT. WINS LITTLE LEAGUE

CALGARY (CP) — Thunder Bay Continentals, representing Ontario, won the 1975 Canadian Little League baseball championship Sunday, defeating Calgary Centennials 6-2 on a one-hitter by Dallas Allaire.

Allaire was one out away from the no-hitter when Calgary rallied for two runs on the hit and two costly Thunder Bay errors in the last of the sixth.

Bill Leesman, foiled Allaire's no-hitter with two out, sending a short fly into centre.

It's Musical Batteries

It was a day of musical batteries at Lambrick Park as Greaves Movers and Farmer Construction failed to settle anything in the first two games of their best-of-three Victoria Senior Amateur Baseball League semi-final playoff.

Farmers romped to a 9-3 triumph in the evening game on the five-hit pitching of Wayne Krimmer and first-game catchers turned into second-game pitchers as the Movers deadlocked the series with an 8-5 nightcap triumph.

Ray Moretti, behind the plate for Greaves in the opener when Dave Morgan relieved starting pitcher Terry Karpiuk in the fourth inning, went all the way on the mound for a five-hit, second-game win with Morgan as his battery mate.

After receiving Krimmer's deliveries, Ron Holmes started the nightcap as Moretti's pitching rival.

Staked to a 4-0 lead when Glen Wallis and Mike Baier each connected for a two-run homer in the top of the first inning, Holmes failed to last the distance as Movers connected for 11 hits, including three by Phil Pinnott, who drove in three runs.

Randy Price, called up by Farmers from the Senior Babe Ruth League, scored three times in the first game and handled catching chores in the second contest.

Deciding game in the semi-final series is slated on the Lambrick diamond tonight at 6:30 with the winner advancing against Gorge Hotel in the final. That series is scheduled to open Wednesday night.

The more you know about whisky, The better for OFC 8-Year Old.

In between 2 and 12 years, at one point in aging, like everything else in life, Canadian whisky reaches "The Prime of Life": golden, mellow, smooth and full bodied.

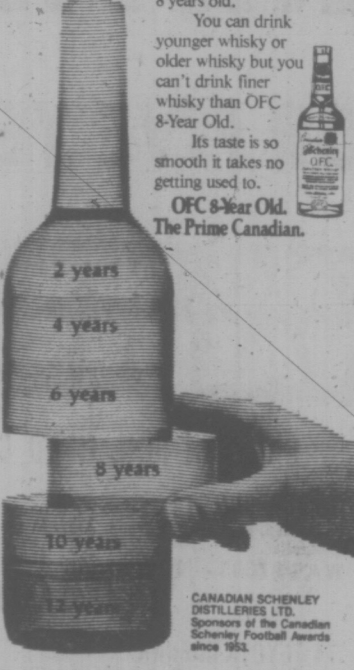

In our opinion, 8 years old is "Prime".

That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old. And only 8 years old.

You can drink younger whisky or older whisky but you can't drink finer whisky than OFC 8-Year Old.

Its taste is so smooth it takes no getting used to.

OFC 8-Year Old. The Prime Canadian.

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — Two undefeated teams go into action in International Cup baseball matches today.

Canada, with two victories in its first two games, is scheduled to play Italy, losers in its first two games, and Japan, which won its only start, plays South Korea.

Both Canada and Japan are in group A of the eight-team tournament.

The United States moved to the top of Group B on Sunday by defeating winless Italy 12-0 behind the four-hit pitching of Steve Powers. The right-hander scattered four single, struck out five and walked six men he faced.

The Italians dropped their second game in a row and now have permitted 21 runs against while scoring twice.

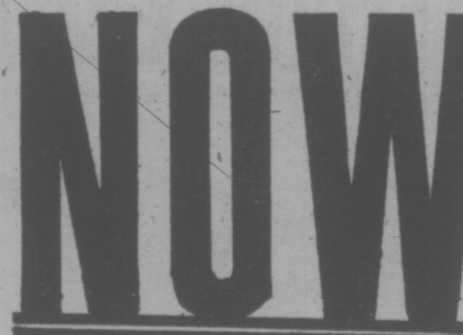

In the other game Sunday, Puerto Rico won its first game in three tries, defeating winless Colombia 9-2 with some heavy hitting.

Co-Ed Captures Golf Title

NEWTON, Mass. — Beth Daniel, an 18-year-old Furman University sophomore from Charleston, S.C., won the 75th U.S. women's Amateur golf championship Saturday with a pressure-packed, 3-and-2 triumph over Donna Horton of Jacksonville, Fla.

Holding a 2-up lead after the morning round, Miss Daniel needed a strong finish in the closing stages of the scheduled 36-hole final at Brae Burn Country Club.

Miss Horton, 21, a former North Carolina resident who will enter her senior year at the University of Florida next month, squared the match with a birdie at the 28th hole, halved the next two and then faded before Miss Daniel's accurate shots.

Making her first appearance in the national tournament, Miss Daniel became one of the few teen-agers to win the title as she avenged a loss to Miss Horton in the 1971 Carolinas junior championship.

NEW COACH FOR 'CAPS

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jim Easton, 34, a veteran of 13 seasons in the Scottish League first division, is being let go after two seasons as coach of the Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League.

General Manager Denny Velch made the announcement.

"We didn't make the playoffs for two years in a row," Velch said. "Therefore we had to make some change if we are to improve. This is part of pro sport — the coach must to some degree be held responsible for a losing record."

Herb Capozzi, president of the club, said no announcement on the coaching position is expected until after the next directors' meeting Sept. 9.

Easton moved to the NASL in 1973 as captain of the Miami Toros, finishing that season as assistant to the coach, John Young.

WHO'S SECOND IN CRICKET?

Alcos appear on their way to a first-place finish in the Victoria and District Cricket Association, but the scramble for the runner-up berth remains a nip-and-tuck struggle.

Following a two-wicket triumph over Incogs Saturday, Alcos are but one win away from clinching the top spot.

Albion created a deadlock with Castaways in the second position with a last-over, three-wicket win over Cowichan Sunday, but only Castaways have a chance to catch Alcos.

Holding an 11-point lead, Alcos have two matches remaining. Castaways have three to play and Albion two, with each victory worth five points.

Playing at Shawnigan Lake, Albions scored 114 runs for seven wickets after dismissing Cowichan for 113.

Peter Brett (37 runs) and Tony Quarless (19) were the leading batsmen for Albions, who got a three-for-50 bowling performance from Don Hughes. Tim Lord (28) and Dave Thompson (22) were the Cowichan scoring leaders.

In Sunday's other match, Oak Bay played to a draw with Nanaimo at Windsor Park.

Batting first, Oak Bay was helped most by Jan Aten (51) and Tom Hayes (26) on the way to an all-out tally of 141.

Despite fine bowling by Oak Bay's Eric Richards, who took seven wickets for 32 runs, Nanaimo defended stubbornly and was still batting at the close with eight wickets down for 117 runs.

Alcos scored their two-wicket win Saturday despite a sparkling effort by Rob Wilson, who scored 24 Incogs runs and captured six Alcos' wickets while yielding only 19 runs.

Two Area Shooters Make Bisley Team

SOUTH MARCH, Ont. (CP) — The 18-shooters who are assured of berths on the Canadian team at next summer's Bisley rifle matches in England, including one from Victoria and another from Brenwood, were named by the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association (DCRA) Saturday at the end of the association's annual meet near here.

The shooters had the highest scores in the Canadian Target Rifle Aggregate, which includes results from eight different matches during the week-long meet.

They are: G. F. Sanderson, Ottawa; Pat Fortney, Calgary; Alain Marion, Hull, Que.; G. H. Farquharson, Kamloops; D. G. Daines, Vancouver; C. Tremblay, Quebec City; R. D. Laboyne, Vancouver; R. L. Clark, Burlington, Ont.; P. O. Papasideris, Calgary; R. J. Flintoft, Vancouver; Arnold Parks, Saint John, N.B.; C. G. Dick, Calgary; Bob Pitcairn, Delta; D. C. Bullock, Vancouver; E. S. W. Andrews, Victoria; Sgt. L. Mercier, Valcartier, Que.; A. G. Peden, Brentwood, and J. E. Daigle, Valcartier, Que.

The Governor-General's prize for marksmanship stayed in Canada for the second consecutive year after Arnold Parks of Saint John, N.B., captured the award.

Parks, who won the award in 1969 and captured the Queen's Prize at the Bisley matches in England in 1968, scored 287 of a possible 300 in the three-stage event.

George Sanderson of Ottawa, who won the prize last year, captured the top spot in the Canadian target rifle aggregate with a score of 863 of a possible 905.

Second place in the Governor-General's event was taken by Pat Fortney of Calgary with 286. Pft. Lt. David Calvert, a member of the Great Britain Rifle Team, also had a score of 286 but finished third because Fortney had a better score in the 900-yard round of the final stage.

England Poised For Victory In Test Match

LEEDS, England (Reuter) — Captain Tony Creig seemed poised to lead England to victory over Australia by close on the third day of the third cricket test Saturday.

England, with seven second innings in hand, led by 337 runs, and must stand an excellent chance of bowling Australia to defeat over the next two days on a pitch that is increasingly taking spin.

Pace-bowler John Snow closed Australia's first innings at 135 when he captured the wickets of Dennis Lillee and Jeff Thomson before lunch.

England set about consolidating its first-innings lead of 153 with some unspectacular but solid run making and at close were 184 for three in the second inning.

David Steele was undefeated on 59 — his third half century in four innings since making his debut for England in the second test.

Cyclist Captures Two in Row

Michel Peron won his second successive Victoria Wheelers' road race Sunday on the William Head Road.

Peron covered the 51-kilometre distance in one hour, seven minutes and 20 seconds to finish five seconds ahead of runner-up Mack Ray and third-place Ken James.

Phil Quillevere took fourth with a 1:07:37 time while Pat Peron was fifth with 1:12:05 and Dave Emery sixth with the same time.

On Thursday, Peron captured the 50-kilometre event at the University of Victoria. His time was 58:30, the same as runner-up Stu Cox, third-place John Swan and fourth-place Terry Oldford.

Rowdies, Timbers Clash in Final

PORTLAND (AP) — Striker Peter Withe's goal gave Portland Timbers a 1-0 win over St. Louis Stars Sunday in the North American Soccer League semi-final.

Hotelmen Travel the Shutout Route

Mel Nelson and Randy Jackson combined their pitching talents for three successive shutouts to guide Ingham Hotel into the provincial senior "B" men's softball tournament.

Ingham earned the berth in the championship event at Kelowna on the Labor Day weekend by staging an undefeated match as Central Park in a round-robin playoff involving three other Stuffy McGinnis League teams — Seaboard Construction, Tony's Holdings and Royal Oak Sporting Goods.

Nelson doled out five hits in a route-going performance Saturday as the hotel crew blanked Tony's 7-0.

Jackson opened the Sunday portion of the playoff with a two-hit, 1-0 triumph over Royal Oak.

Nelson, getting the tallies he needed on a third-inning home run by Bob Butterworth and a run-scoring single by Terry Oscarson in the fifth, nailed down the Kelowna tourney with a three-hit, 2-0 victory over Seaboard in the deciding game.

Seaboard was also unbeaten going into the final game after winning two Saturday games—1-0 over Royal Oak and 6-4 over Tony's.

Tony's finished with one victory—a 2-1 decision over winless Royal Oak in Sunday's second contest.

Exhibition action takes over at 6:30 tonight on the Central Park diamond with Mike's Sports Shop of the McGinnis League meeting Eagles of the Heywood League.

On Tuesday, Seaboard and Royal Oak will resume their league playoff with Seaboard holding a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five series.

On Wednesday, the McGinnis League all-stars will tangle in an exhibition contest with Victoria Bates, the provincial senior "A" champions.

TORONTO (CP) — It took the Tartan Flash to get the adrenalin flowing in fans as the World Masters track and field championships ended Saturday.

The Tartan Flash in Duncan MacLean, a 90-year-old Scot who took part in a special 200-metre sprint with a couple of young fellows — Charles Speechley, 87, of England, and Fritz Schreiber, 81, of Sweden.

Although the youngster in the group, Schreiber, took the race in a Canadian age record time of 44.7 seconds, it was clearly the Tartan Flash who had the visible support of the crowd.

He finished second in 49.2 with Speechley a distant third in 53.3.

Ian Hume of Melbourne, Que., had a world record in the triple jump to share the spotlight with two Commonwealth track stars.

The 61-year-old Hume surpassed his previous best of 9.68 metres — Canadian Open and native marks — with a record distance of 10.45 metres, best in the world for his age group.

McGregors Win Findlay Trophy

The McGregor family's trophy case has acquired another lawn bowling award.

Jim McGregor, aided by Jim Jr. and Carol McGregor, won the Findlay Trophy in mixed triple competition by defeating the Burnside trio of Percy Hawes 17-15 in the final at Victoria West.

Bowling with Hawes were Jessie Kinnear and Flora Martin.

CAPTAIN Michael Barrow (left) took over command of the Esquimalt-based 2nd Canadian Destroyer Squadron on Friday.

He succeeds Capt. John Rodocanachi who has been appointed director of maritime requirements (sea) at national defence headquarters in Ottawa. He has been in command of the squadron since July, 1973.

Barrow has been director of maritime requirements (sea) for the past year and, previous to that, served in the directorate of personnel careers (officers) in Ottawa. From 1969 to 1972 he was deputy chief of staff (operations) for the commander, Canadian Flotilla (Atlantic).

His last command afloat was between 1967 and 1969 in the Halifax-based destroyer HMCS St. Laurent.

Check-In Missed, Man Strips

CAIRO (UPI) — A disgruntled Arab who arrived too late for his flight check-in at Cairo Airport stripped naked and demanded he be allowed aboard the aircraft anyway, the newspaper Al Ahran said today.

The man, which the newspaper did not identify, by name or nationality, was told he was too late to board the craft.

He stood in the departure lounge and "stripped until he was 'like the day he was born'" and said he would stay that way until airport officials changed their minds.

The man acquiesced when authorities convinced him that it really was too late and promised him he could leave on a later flight, Al Ahran said.

The name of the air carrier was not mentioned by the newspaper.

British PM Ordered Home Burglary — Book

LONDON (Reuters) — A British prime minister, worried about national security in the last decade, ordered a burglary at another politician's home, it is reported in a book to be published in London next month.

The burglary was said to have been carried out by a detective of the police special branch because the prime minister was dubious about some of the politician's activities and was concerned about a security risk.

The only two British prime ministers in the last 10 years have been Harold Wilson and Edward Heath.

The book's authors, Clive Borrell and Brian Cashinella, do not say who was in office at the time, nor do they offer any supporting evidence because to do so would have pinpointed the period involved.

"We have to protect our source," Barrell said in reply to questions about the book, titled Crimes in Britain Today. Borrell has been crime reporter of The Times since 1967 and Cashinella worked for the same paper in the crime field for some years before transferring recently to The Daily Express.

The story of the book's "burglary" claim was broken by a rival newspaper, The News of the World.

Saanich Building Shows Upswing

Construction increased in Saanich in July, 194 permits being issued for a total value of $3,505,912 compared to 162 permits valued at $2,738,350 for July 1974.

In contrast to the national trend, there was an increase in the number of single-family homes started.

There were 89 permits issued for single-family homes; and duplexes, an increase of 15 permits over July 1974 when the total value was $2,178,400. The 89 permits represented a value of $4,110,500.

In spite of the three-month civic labor dispute the same type of increase is reflected in figures for January, May, June and July of this year. The figures for February, March and April haven't been completed.

A total of 484 permits was issued in the four months for a total value of $15,935,035. Of these 255 were for private homes or duplexes, compared to 266 permits for a value of $6,148,400 in 1974. A total of 460 permits valued at $8,414,320 was issued in the corresponding 1974 period.

The largest projects started in July included two 15-unit Dunhill Developments apartments on Interurban, both valued at $470,200; an addition to Cedar Hill Junior Secondary School valued at $308,273, an addition to Mount Douglas Senior Secondary School, valued at $292,491; a $100,000 addition to Brian Holley Motors Ltd.'s car lot on Douglas, a $125,000 restaurant and beauty salon on Shelbourne and a $391,000 bank building at 2925 Tillicum.

When the Wind Blows, Look Out!

Riding the Hammerheads

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Wind, not rain, is the new bugbear of major construction projects in balmy B.C.

When breezes blow 30 miles an hour, money goes down the drain at projects sprouting those long-boomed hammerhead cranes.

These sky trolleys have to shut down in a strong wind, in turn immobilizing workmen who depend on them for supplies in multi-storey construction.

The loss in construction time and wages is one undesirable result, and every day the crane is idle costs unproductive rental.

In windy Victoria construction loss is probably as much due to crane shutdown as to rainstorms or other climatic conditions.

Workers employed by Cana Construction at the courthouse expansion project jokingly say crane operator John Brum has the easiest job on the site.

Brum, of 597 Peto Place in Saanich, has been an operator for three years. He agrees there can be plenty of boredom but when things are humming, he's an important man.

"You have everybody's life in your hands," he said today just before he climbed into the four-foot-square control capsule on the main boom. "You have to put the load on the exact right spot. That can be tough—especially if it's windy and it often is in Victoria."

At present seven of the hammerheads sweep the sky over downtown Victoria buildings, six of them owned and leased by Mutual Equipment Rentals Ltd., which was the first to bring the system to Victoria about 15 years ago.

Manager Lorne Broughton agrees the hammerheads are spectacular, dramatic and potentially hazardous—for the operator something like flying and being in jail at the same time.

But unlike ground-based cranes, the hammerheads have built-in, automatic safety controls and in Victoria their operators have always put safety first.

For example, he said Gene Denyluk, operator of the crane on 14-storey North Park Manor, refuses to make a move until checking the vitals of his machine before each shift. All work requiring supplies or equipment waits until Denyluk is satisfied.

Denyluk is frequently the last man off the job, preferring to make some adjustments before going home. Besides, he has the farthest to walk to get back to earth.

It can be cold up there in his tiny cabin on the boom, half-way between heaven and North Park Street.

But in summer heat there is better chance of a cooling breeze than in the swelter below, and Denyluk may eat his lunch up there, spending the entire shift swinging in circles, or enjoying magnificent views during coffee breaks.

"There's nothing like it, as long you're not afraid of heights," said Broughton, who has learned crane operation as part of his job.

"It's a sensation. Every time it lifts you drop a foot or two, then you go up when you release the load—it's like one of those circus rides," Broughton said.

The wind makes things difficult because of the resistance offered by the boom—anywhere from 82 to 130 feet in length—the control cabin and the counterweight, which is several thousand pounds of ballast or a lump of concrete.

Sometimes the push of air is too much for the brake which acts on the pivot track and the load may be swung wide. The operator may choose to swing the opposite way and come up into the wind for better control.

But over a certain point wind pressure makes operation too hazardous, and there is a cutout switch on the electrical system to shut off all power. Another cutout is activated by an overload.

Working in heavy wind is "pretty well hopeless," Broughton said, although the job suffers without the crane.

Hammerheads are "the kingpin of the whole job," dominating productivity as well as the skyline.

This type of crane—invented in post-war Germany—has almost entirely replaced the materials hoist, which runs like an elevator in a long column of steel framework on some jobs. But it hasn't eliminated the man hoist for jobs more than 20 storeys.

Compensation laws prohibit men travelling in materials buckets.

Broughton estimates hammerheads save 15 per cent on construction time and 10 per cent on cost. They are so busy the construction foreman allots crane time to each trade on the job so there is no dispute over priorities.

He also directs the crane operator, using two-way radio, and is the only person in contact with the operator.

Elaborating on the safety theme, Broughton indicated crane operators may be safer aloft than many a neck-cracking pedestrian trying to keep his eye on the swinging boom.

Bolts holding the main components require daily inspection because they may work loose under strain. At the end of a job, or 12 months, whichever comes first, they are replaced with new bolts of high tensile steel.

The cables get a daily going over and are changed with each job, and a log book of safety and maintenance checks is kept by the operator.

If the equipment is sound and automatic breakers are in order, there should be no accidents resulting from misuse or mechanical fault, but inconceivable as it may seem, some operators—not here—have been known to bypass an overload switch to permit a heavier load to be raised.

This could cause the mast to bend and possibly collapse, Broughton explained.

In Vancouver a crane operator escaped a plunge into the street when his crane crashed down over the edge of the building and hung there. He crawled gingerly back to the roof along a mangled boom.

Broughton could not pinpoint the cause in that case, but it was undoubtedly an overload or insecure bolt.

Ever wonder how hammerheads get up in the world? Or get back to the ground at the end of a 20, 30 or 40-storey job?

The skyscraper projects make use of a helicopter for final dismantling, but that's costly for smaller jobs, and a mobile crane is put to use.

In Victoria, Mutual Equipment's 65-ton mobile with a 220-foot boom will dismantle the biggest hammerhead on buildings up to about 20 storeys.

A smaller crane will lift the four main components into place when the first two floors are completed. The mast section requires two floors for support. As the building rises, the tower is jacked up a floor at a time, which takes about half a full shift to accomplish.

The cone section sits atop the mast to provide a pivot for the boom and tall sections attached to it.

Trolley and hoisting gear run along the boom, which also supports the cabin. Draw works and counterweight are on the tail.

Mutual employs seven hammerhead crane operators aged 25-40 who Broughton describes as typical workmen who enjoy their job and a pay scale 40 cents an hour higher than a mobile crane operator.

The special demands and potential risks so far above the ground are worth $9.80 an hour at present, but it takes a special kind of adjustment to the job and operators are usually in demand.

At first, Mutual bought its cranes and broke in its own operators. Today it is possible to attend a six-week school in Vancouver sponsored by contractors and the apprenticeship board, which certifies successful students.

Finally, if you want to rent a hammerhead you have your choice of sizes and lift capacities up to 215 tons, starting at around $1,000 a month up to $3,400 for the 120-foot boom now working at Laurel Point with two smaller cranes. If you buy, it'll cost you $50,000 to $130,000.

THAT Was a Newspaper: Memories of the War

A brief mention here the other day about Bill Ward, of the Wildlife Review, and your correspondent working for The Maple Leaf, the wartime Canadian Army newspaper, has resulted in some pleasant letters from ex-servicemen, one of whom writes, "It may not have been the world's best newspaper, but it was certainly the most avidly read."

I grant you this may be the year's most inconsequential historical footnote, but it's made me very happy and as The Maple Leaf's news editor in London, and, later, its managing editor in Delmanhorst, in northern, occupied Germany, I wonder if it doesn't deserve at least a small, fond tribute.

Matter of fact it was one of the world's best newspapers, as we remember it, and certainly the United Kingdom edition, which was put out in the Evening Standard offices in Shoe Lane, just off Fleet Street, was about as close to a newspaperman's dream as any that's ever gone to press.

A small group of us had all the resources of one of London's best-equipped plants, three available wire services and a string of our own correspondents. We were not bothered with the irksome demands of an advertising department or a need for circulation since we had a guaranteed captive audience as long as Canadians remained in uniform.

Our readers, too, as the ex-serviceman writes me, were of that dream variety who digest every line with total interest and a downright touching gratitude. It was a bad time in the world, but I never had such fun or rewards at work.

One Christmas, I remember, we used the whole front page for a picture of a scene in Quebec. It was a very simple picture, just a horse hauling a sleigh along a deep snow road, but it was a fine picture, too, with the steam coming from the horse's nostrils and you could almost hear the resin sound of runners on dry snow.

I know that gave a lot of hard-boiled soldiers a sweet and mournful breath of home that Christmas night. Indeed, they wrote in droves to tell us so.

Lord Beaverbrook, himself, paid us only one visit. We were warned well in advance. When the Beaver was making a tour of the plant the grapevine spread the news. All the Standard workers would wash their faces and run madly hither and thither. As for us, our only problem was to hide our eccentric cartoonist, Tom Luzzzy, later to become one of England's top muralists.

Lord Beaverbrook strolled into our office, surrounded by his nervous yes-men and spoke a few words of encouragement to us. Then Luzzzy sauntered out of his work-room, wearing, as usual, his unpressed battle dress, two rows of German medals he'd picked up somewhere, a Swiss mountaineering cap with a tall feather in it and carrying a vicious-looking foil, since his hobby was fencing.

All of the yes-men gasped in unison, but the face of the Beaver—which always reminded me of the face of a terribly alert simian—broke into a remarkable grin. I was never much of a Beaverbrook-lover, even less so when I went to work for him after the war, but after that he went up several notches in my enthusiasm.

Life on the Delmanhorst edition of the paper was not as pleasant. The printing staff, linotype operators, head-setters and make-up men were stolid Germans. The plant, itself, had been the headquarters of a Strength-Through-Joy newspaper and we inherited many of the fanatics who had staffed it.

All of us, the soft-hearted, homesick conquerors, tried at first to ingratiate ourselves with the gloomy Teutons in the hope that they would produce a better-looking newspaper. It didn't work. The Germans worked a slow-down and made demands for longer lunch hours, shorter working hours and higher pay.

It was then that we discovered that a Hitler-type roar produced more than a pleasant smile. The tougher we got the more respect we got. It was a discouraging lesson that made the whole of the occupation an unpleasant business.

Still, life must have been pretty tiresome for them. They were settling type in a foreign language and sometimes we kept them late at night while we waited for Army Signals to relay the world-shaking news of who had won a Toronto Maple Leafs-Montreal Canadiens hockey game.

When they complained of this overtime we had our interpreter explain that the game was an important part of the Canadian Strength-Through-Joy program. This seemed to satisfy them.

McCall Scores Again

For the second straight year, Marshall McCall, 805 Newport Avenue, has won the R. T. Wallace Scholarship for being the top student at the University of Victoria.

McCall, a third-year Arts and Science student, had a perfect A-plus average on his sessional exams, a feat he had also achieved last year.

The scholarship, named after UVic's chancellor, is worth $800 this year.

McCall is among 270 UVic students to have won $50,500 in scholarships and awards. The winners were announced by the university senate committee on awards.

Another student who is again among the top scholarship winners is Jocelyn Abbott, 3018 Westdowne Road, a third-year Fine Arts student. She won a total of $600, consisting of the Faculty Women's Scholarship ($200), the Rebecca and Esther Lazarus Scholarships in Music ($150), a president's scholarship ($125) and the Weber Memorial Bursary ($125).

Winner of the second most prestigious award, the $700 British Columbia 1958 Centennial Scholarship, is Louis Bayliss of Kelowna, a third-year Arts and Science student. She was also awarded the Birks Gold Watch for her contributions to student life.

Board Stands Firm On Alternatives

Greater Victoria school board's decision not to take on any new alternative school projects this year is firm "at the moment," board chairman Bill Ross said today.

Ross said the board has not acceded to government requests, particularly from the human resources department, that it take on responsibility for several local projects previously financed by human resources.

"But if there are school age children in District 61 who would miss an education (without the projects) then we are prepared to accept them into existing programs," he said.

"This year at the provisional budget stage... we decided we would not sponsor any more alterations until the existing ones had been evaluated," said Ross.

The board is sticking to that decision despite the requests, he added.

Projects threatened by partial or total withdrawal of human resources funding include the Warehouse School, the Vic West alternative project, and the Group Home Day Project at Centennial United Church.

FIRST SIGNS of school appeared today as school supplies went on sale for 18,000 elementary school students in seven local schools. Helping with sales at Hampton elementary this morning were Susan

TV Game to Detect Sight Problems

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Vancouver pediatrician wants Big Bird and the Cookie Monster to help parents determine whether their children have any eyesight problems.

Dr. A. L. Macdonald, an ophthalmologist, said he would like to see children's television shows such as Sesame Street including an occasional eye chart segment.

"It could be made into a playful game in the middle of the program," said Dr. Macdonald.

Dr. Macdonald, director of the pediatric ophthalmology clinic at Vancouver General Hospital, said he intends submitting the idea to various television stations.

He said a simple eye chart could help parents test their children's vision at home in front of the television set and reduce problems in later life.

While simple eye charts would not help diagnose conditions such as tumors they screen out various other problems, said the doctor.

Dr. Macdonald also said that all parents should have their children's eyes tested by their family doctor after they reach six months.

Energy Minus Fats, Sugar — From Homemade Yogurt

HILDA BEASTALL

Yogurt has become an everyday food in families with an increasing awareness of the long range health hazard of oversweetened foods. When commercial sugar is no longer relied on to supply quick energy needs, yogurt is enjoyed as a means of bringing out the true sweet flavors of not only fruits and vegetables but also grains as in fancy yeast breads and coffee cakes.

Homemade yogurt is a source of long lasting energy without fats or sugars.

So today you find here the easiest recipe for making three 16-ounce jars of yogurt at home, at a total price of 40¢, and for making a deliciously tender and tasty yeast coffee cake to serve as a supper dessert, topped with yogurt.

Anyone can make yogurt without special equipment, but I suggest assembling the items needed well in advance. Your selected items may differ from those I use, but if they work for you that is what you want. Give the time before starting the first batch, to work out the method you will use.

Once you become accustomed to the routine, you can put together the ingredients in 10 minutes and have yogurt incubating for the three hours or so while many other jobs are going on.

First the ingredients:

HOMEMADE PLAIN YOGURT

4 cups warm water
1 cup non-instant skim milk powder
4 Tbsp commercial plain yogurt choosing the one you like best

Pots and pans: One saucepan or pudding basin which pours well, to hold the water, milk powder and yogurt while heating and mixing.

A wire whisk, which I find does a fast job of mixing the warm water with the non-instant milk powder (this does not dissolve instantly).

Three glass jars each holding eight fluid ounces (peanut butter jars suit my needs and fit my saucepan).

A saucepan, with close fitting lid, to hold whatever size and shape jars you use, comfortably, without touching each other or the saucepan, so that the warm water is the same temperature at all points.

Lids for the jars, after yogurt is made, when you put them into refrigerator for quick cooling and storage until used.

Some source of mild warmth to keep the water in covered saucepan at 32 to 35 degs.C. (90 to 95 deg.F.) for three to four hours incubation.

An alternative is to wrap the covered pan in a heated woollen cover and place it in a spot where the warmth will be maintained for the incubation period.

Sources of mild warmth are: (1) electric oven with pilot light on; (2) top element or pilot light on a gas range; (3) at side of top on an oil range, with saucepan raised on wire rack to prevent overheating heat of water in pan.

Number 3 is method I am able to use most easily for there is no fluctuation of temperature once the jars of yogurt reach the same warmth as the water around them, which they will do in the first 15 minutes with the addition of a little extra hot water poured in between the jars.

Method: Measure non-instant skim milk powder into first saucepan or basin. Measure and add two cups warm water. Use wire whisk to beat until almost smooth.

Measure and add yogurt. Beat with whisk for a minute until smooth. Add one more cup of water and mix well. (This leaves one more cup of water to come.)

Pour some of mixture into jars, half filling each. Add final cup of water to mixture in saucepan or basin, mix again, and complete the filling of the jars. Amounts given fill the three eight-fluid-ounce jars to just below the rims.

Have large saucepan ready with one inch of warm or near hot water. Lift jars carefully and place into pan, adjusting so that at least a small space is between and around them.

Put on saucepan lid; place saucepan in spot you select for maintenance of the mild warm temperature of 32 to 35 degs. C. (90 to 95 deg. F.)

Check water in pan after 15 minutes, either with a cooking thermometer or the fingers. If water is slightly "nippy" after one minute immersion but you can keep them in for 90 seconds it is right.

Increase amount of water of same temperature until it comes to the neck of the jars. Do this gradually from a kettle so as not to chill or overheat the yogurt. Both harm the bacilli in yogurt.

After 2½ hours of steady temperature, test a jar by lifting and tilting sideways to see if it has gained a custardy consistency. If so, it is ready to come out. If not, leave another half hour or more until it tests as a soft custard.

Remove jars; put on clean screw top lids; place jars at once on shelf in refrigerator without jolting contents. Allow space between jars for cold air to circulate freely and chill contents.

After three hours, yogurt should be thick and creamy and usable. It is even better next day.

Too low temperature or too short an incubation period results in a thin sour milk; too long in warmth or too high gives a cheesy texture and vinegary taste — neither are signs of good homemade yogurt.

Neither kinds are harmful, so don't waste a batch if less than perfect. It is safe to drink or use in cooking.

Yogurt should get it right first time. Then you keep the last half jar, three or four ounces, to use as starter for the next batch, in place of the bought commercial yogurt in the list.

Yogurt, being essentially a live bacillus product, should never be subjected to either high heat or freezing. Both extremes render the bacilli inactive. Since these are beneficial bacilli, we get their full benefit when yogurt is used by spoonful of bowlful with fruits, salads, or desserts in place of fancy dressing, mayonnaise, whipped cream, meringues and so on.

Made with fat-free skim milk powder, the protein value is good and only the fat is missing from the whole milk value of the amount consumed.

Now for a delicious dessert, made with baker's yeast and a mixture of healthful grain flours, plus a choice of fruits to suit what you enjoy or have on hand.

This yeast dough is quick to make since it is beaten instead of kneaded, and requires only one period of rising.

The fruit should be one to slice, such as apricots (best flavor), peaches, or cooking apples. Cook lightly for few minutes with one spoonful of water; drain juice (keep for later), cool fruit.

Yeast Fruit Coffee Cake

¾ cup warm water
1 tsp sugar
1 pkt or 1 Tbsp. dry yeast
2 Tbsp. soft margarine
1 Tbsp brown sugar
½ tsp salt
¾ cup unbleached flour
1 scant cup mixed whole-wheat flour, soy flour and wheat germ
1 small egg
2 cups sliced apricots, peaches or apples, cooked
2 Tbsp soft margarine
2 Tbsp brown sugar

Measure warm water in large warm bowl. Stir in 1 teaspoon sugar. Sprinkle yeast on top. Let stand 10 minutes. Stir.

Meanwhile soften margarine and stir in one tablespoon sugar and the salt. Add to dissolved yeast in large bowl. Add lightly beaten egg and the unbleached flour. Beat until smooth.

Stir in remainder of flour mixture. This will be a stiff batter.

Spread in well greased 8 by 12-inch baking pan, bringing dough a little up the sides. Arrange cooked fruit slices in rows across the pan. Mix brown sugar and margarine and dot over fruit.

Cover with another dish and a warm towel; let rise in warm place out of draught for about 1 hour. The dough will rise around the edges and between the rows of fruit slices.

Bake in fairly hot oven 350 deg. C. for about 30 minutes or until crust is browned.

Let stand in pan for 10 minutes before removing from pan, or serve warm from pan if it's a glass baking pan.

Warm or cold, homemade yogurt is the only thing to serve with this tender fruity cake.

Make it and the yogurt for a coffee party to celebrate the end of summer holidays. Then use both recipes often during the year.

Welch Medical Report

The conventional treatment of gallstones, especially if they have caused symptoms, is to remove the gall bladder, which contains the stones, and be done with them.

When gallstones are not causing trouble but have shown up in X-ray studies, unless there are serious contraindications to surgery, most doctors advise surgical removal.

This is because if the stones start moving into the bile passages, and they often do, they not only can cause agonizing gall bladder attacks but may block the main bile channel and cause obstructive jaundice (yellowing of the skin), and then surgery becomes urgent and more risky.

Now, however, operating on patients with a certain type of gallstone when they are not causing symptoms is not our only choice. This is because gallstones, made up principally of crystallized cholesterol (comprising 80 to 90 per cent of the stones that afflict human beings) can be successfully and safely dissolved.

A daily dose of chenodeoxycholic acid (chenic, for short) will cause the disappearance of cholesterol stones provided the gall bladder that contains them is not so diseased as to have lost its capacity to function.

The disappearance of the stones is verified by serial X-ray studies, and in the majority of carefully selected patients treated at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester this was seen to take place over one to three years.

Most radio-opaque gallstones (usually containing calcium) do not respond to such treatment, and some radio-lucent stones do not respond either, because although they do not cast a solid X-ray shadow, they are probably not composed of cholesterol or may be coated with a non-cholesterol substance.

A drawback of the chenic acid treatment is that its effect on cholesterol may be reversed in some patients when the drug is stopped and stones may recur. In such patients, it may prove necessary to continue to take the medicine indefinitely to prevent a recurrence of the stones.

Treatment with chenic acid is not yet by any means a substitute for gall bladder surgery, but it does mean that many patients who have cholesterol stones and are poor surgical risks have an acceptable alternative to surgery which is highly effective and quite safe.

Movies—They Don't Have to Be Vulgar

One evening last week I dropped in at the Oak Bay Theatre to enjoy, once again, that delightful picture—Sound of Music.

It was the second to last night of a week-long run and the theatre was full. It had been like that at every showing during the week, a man at the door told me.

How often had this picture been at the Oak Bay Theatre, I asked. The answer was "a good many times."

Was the theatre always so well-filled? Again the answer came—it never fails.

On that night last week, the audience ranged from children (whose eyes never left the screen) right up to senior citizens.

In between were teen-agers, young marrieds, lone men and women, and family groups, all visibly enjoying this wonderful picture.

"Why...why...don't they make more pictures like that," I heard a young father say, as we left the theatre.

He and his wife and three growing children went off up the street with a skip and a hop.

As I watched I was almost sure that once around the corner they would be off and singing much as the von Trapp family did on the screen.

A boy and a girl in their late teens wandered by, holding hands.

Just then she looked up at him and said, quite audibly "I'd like to see it again tomorrow night."

It was obvious that although the scene in a glass-walled garden retreat in which young love was portrayed as an ecstatic dance during a thunder and lightning storm, rather than flat on one of the stone benches, they had been thrilled and moved.

Adults were equally stirred during a latter scene in the same setting when von Trapp

and Maria discover their love. Not by suggestive posturing but with a touch, a kiss, a word or two, that left something to the imagination.

Which brings me once more to the question that young father was asking as he left the theatre. Why indeed, do they not make more pictures like that?

I realize we are living in an age of stark realism. I also know we are being brainwashed in many ways to accept this fact.

I'm quite aware there are those who insist there is no such thing as romance in the world any more. It's merely a fundamental urge.

Aware too, that there are those who will snort and call me "a square (or something even worse)" for writing like this.

Nevertheless, I firmly believe there are more of my kind of people around than those who enjoy vulgarity and downright depravity...or as some would call it—realism.

Quite recently in the Christian Science Monitor, I read an interview with Lillian Gish, long-time movie actress who can look back to working with famed D. W. Griffith in the days of silent moving pictures and who is still present in leading roles on the screen and on television.

She was asked how she reacted to the present vogue for realism on the screen.

Her answer was that in most of the new films she found much unnecessary vulgarity.

Then she said, "now, if you are portraying vulgar people, I suppose you have to do them as they are...but why take normal people and make vulgarities out of them?" (Why indeed!)

She moved about the world, she said, and she had seen all kinds of people "but in all my life, I've never been around vulgarity such as they show in films today."

Perhaps there are such people, she conceded, but you don't want them near you...you don't have to listen to them.

"It is playing down to the public," she concluded, "and there are more intelligent and tasteful ones than ignorant and vulgar."

I believe that if a poll could be taken it would show there are thousands in the Greater

Victoria area—and of all ages—who are of the same mind.

At one time it was the general belief that in our contacts with people and in the situations we encountered in our daily lives, no one stood still.

Either a person was enriched by such contacts and so climbed a notch higher toward maturity or was debased and slipped back into a morass of self-indulgence and, as Lillian Gish puts it, vulgarity.

With that thought in mind, then certainly the movies labelled with black cats or the word "mature," the television presentations that are excluded because they show "today as it is," and the magazines and other printed matter that leave little to the imagination either in pictures or text, are doing nothing to help this present generation reach that higher step.

Rather they are doing an ever-increasing job of dragging us down.

DOCTOR PRICKS BUBBLE BATHS

VANCOUVER (CP) — An Ontario urologist says that all commercial children's bubble baths should be removed from the market.

Dr. Ian Todd, chief of urology at Scarborough Centenary Hospital, said in an interview that bubble-bath-induced local inflammation in the crotch area "may create a milieu for bacterial multiplication and subsequent urinary tract infection."

Dr. Todd, a speaker at the annual scientific assembly of the College of Family Physicians of Canada, admitted he finds only one or two cases of such infection a year in his practice "but the fact that it appears at all is cause for removal of these products."

Dr. Todd said there are two causes of urinary tract infections in little girls — infection from within and without the tract. Inflammation caused by bubble bath or pinworms is the source of external infection, he said.

Internal infection is caused by a lack of complete emptying of the urinary tract, he said.

"Particular note should be made of the age of onset (of urinary tract infection) for under the age of two, four per cent of girls will develop a urinary tract infection and .5 per cent of boys," he said.

A 'First' For Abby

Dear Abby: We don't have any problems, but after being married for 25 years and as much in love as ever, we wonder if you have ever heard of anyone else in our situation.

We are husband and wife — also brother and sister. We have been close as long as we can remember. There is a difference of two years between us. We were raised in a big city. All through high school we went together. We tried dating others, but preferred each other.

We never realized the depth of our feelings until our parents were killed in an automobile accident. We were 17 and 19. We continued to live together, remembering that our parents told us always to stick together because we had no close relatives.

One night while discussing our future, we broke down and admitted our feelings for each other. A week later we went to a place that allowed first cousins to marry, claimed to be cousins and were married.

We moved as far away from our home as possible to break off all ties there and keep our secret. We are considered good citizens in our community, and have two healthy children and one healthy grandchild.

We know that society does not accept what we have done, but it has worked out perfectly for us. Have you or any of your readers ever known of a situation like ours? Please keep our name confidential. Every word of this letter is true. — Mr. and Mrs. X.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. X.: I thought I had heard everything, but this is a "first."

Dear Abby: I am a firm believer in wearing seatbelts whenever I am riding in an automobile. I belong to a car pool, which is a necessity because my work is 50 miles from home — which means 100 miles of auto driving every day, five days a week. Now, the problem: One of the men I ride with has his seatbelts tied up in such a way that it's impossible to use them.

I once asked him if it would be okay if I untied one for my use, and he flatly refused my request.

What do you suggest? — NO SEATBELT.

Dear No: The solution is clear. Drop out of his pool and find another means of transportation more to your liking.

Dear Abby: We recently attended a dinner party at the home of a friend who served chicken prepared with a wine sauce. She proudly announced it to all her guests.

My husband is a controlled alcoholic, and has never been ashamed to admit it. He's a big leader in AA — a fact known to our hosts.

Abby, my husband ate the chicken and it didn't bother him, but isn't it possible for an alcoholic to get set off on an alcoholic binge by tasting the wine? — NAMELESS.

Dear Nameless: Chicken cooked in wine is no threat to an alcoholic because the alcohol cooks out. However, a liqueur topping on ice cream can be clearly tasted and therefore is not recommended.

your clutches are going bad. If it goes into gear more quickly once the engine has warmed up, it's the valve body. Let a good transmission shop check.

Dear Mike: The brake system in my 1971 Olds 88 has a leak that no one can locate. The car has disc front brakes. Is there a dye or coloring that can be added to the brake fluid to trace the leak?

WORRIED

Dear Worried: No dye I know of, but have you checked to see if there's fluid in your power-brake vacuum unit? Sometimes the vacuum will suck fluid out of the master cylinder. Otherwise, the leak could be anywhere, and I know — pinhole leaks are hard to find. Keep looking and sniffing.

Because of its complexity, your color TV may need more repairs than most other devices in your home.

The 6-page bilingual folder Color TV tells what you should know about purchase, installation and service.

First of all, to familiarize yourself how to operate the various controls, read the instruction booklet which comes with your new set.

The folder points out, however, that some controls which are usually at the back of the set, are only for the use of the technician and should not be adjusted by anyone else.

It also states that even with the most expensive color sets, reception may vary at times. Certain scenes will appear in a more natural colour and some programs will be sharper than others. In most cases a good outside antenna will improve performance and a more stable picture. If you live in a building with a master antenna, trouble could develop in the distribution system without the set being at fault.

The folder also explains that it is not uncommon for a technician to want to take the chassis to the shop for repair. This is because he cannot carry with him all the precision tools he may require. You will also find advice on what you should do before you decide to call a repairman.

Single copies can be picked up at your local Better Business Bureau or send a long (No. 10) self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Better Business Bureau of Canada, 76 St. Clair Avenue West, Toronto, Ont. M4V 1N2. Please allow at least 2-3 weeks for delivery.

Off to Gulf Islands to Catch Sharks

VANCOUVER (CP) — Dr. Murray Newman, director of the Vancouver Public Aquarium, leaves Tuesday on an expedition to capture what he hopes will be the largest live shark ever exhibited.

He's not going to any far-off exotic place to do it, either.

"We're going to the Gulf Islands — there's a location there where we know we can catch very large sharks," Dr. Newman said in an interview.

If all goes according to plan, he and a team of experts from the aquarium hope to catch three 10-foot sharks and bring them back for live display.

The expedition, which has been planned for two years, is fraught with problems, however, he said.

"These sharks are very fierce, strong and voracious in the water but their internal organs are weak and they are subject to great strain out of water," said Dr. Newman.

Because of this, he and his staff are planning every detail of the expedition meticulously and will take at least two boats, including a research vessel, on the trip.

Objective is the capture of about three six-gill sharks (hexanchus griseus) which are seldom seen by man because they are slow-moving bottom fish.

The species of shark Dr. Newman is after feeds on anything it can get, chases its prey and "could attack man if provoked."

Dr. Newman said the sharks usually live at depths of more than 600 feet and have been captured at 5,000 feet. They have a flat-topped head, round snout, long tail and are dark gray with a whitish belly. They mature at six or seven feet but have been known to reach 14 feet.

"The largest sharks on live exhibit that I know of are about 500 pounds and we hope our sharks will be 1,000 pounds," said Dr. Newman.

"We've never exhibited them before because our cold-water shark facilities are not large enough."

Dr. Newman said, however, that the exhibition problem has been solved with an "outdoor swimming pool" for the sharks. The pool is a 24-foot steel tank, lined with vinyl, that has been donated to the aquarium.

The tank will be put on the deck of one of the expedition's ships, and the captured sharks will be lifted into it with the help of slings.

But how will Dr. Newman get the tank full of sharks off the ship and into the aquarium?

"It will be very difficult," is all he would say.

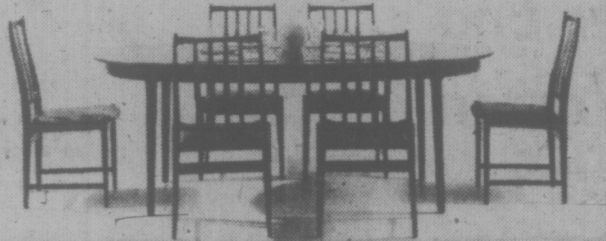

Dr. Newman said the sharks will be caught on lines with enormous hooks baited with chunks of meat or ling cod. On the trip back to Vancouver the sharks will have to be constantly massaged to keep their blood circulating.

VANCOUVER (CP) — For Bob Craigie, 28, the only fault he can find with McBride, population 658, is that it lacks women.

McBride is about 500 miles northeast of Vancouver in the Rocky Mountain trench. It is the largest of a string of villages in the Robson Valley which follows the upper Fraser River.

Craigie, a pharmacist and part-time farmer, has been advertising for some mail-order brides for himself and about 20 of his friends.

"There really aren't any up here," he said in a telephone interview, "and there are very few passing through."

"If a single, unattached lady walks into the beer hall, there's men all over."

"Our biggest problem is finding women who can stand a degree of isolation. Sometimes they tend to get cabin fever."

The area's main attractions are beautiful scenery and a chance of living an outdoor life.

Craigie said most of the men are fairly settled and own their own homes. They work as farmers, forest and construction workers.

"We realize we could go to Vancouver and find wives without too much trouble," said Craigie, "but we all have commitments to our jobs and farms — besides we don't like the city."

He thinks an applicant must be "a pretty together, stable person," able to entertain herself and not miss big-city stimuli. She also must be hard-working and enjoy the outdoors. Good looks don't matter.

"When you get to be 28, they all start looking the same," Craigie said.

RIGHTS CODE TO BE TESTED

VANCOUVER (CP) — A decision is expected Aug. 25 on a challenge by the British Columbia Human Rights Commission to the rights of a beer parlor to refuse service.

Kathleen Ruff, director of the commission, says that "if we lose this one, we're in a hopeless situation."

A charge under the Human Rights Code of B.C. was laid against the Lucerne Mines public house in New Denver, B.C., after two persons with long hair were refused service.

Maurice Guibault, a human rights officer on a fact-finding tour of the Slokan Valley, laid the charge. The Slokan Valley is in the West Kootenay, about 300 miles east of Vancouver.

Guibault and another witness told the three-member inquiry board Aug. 8 in Nelson that Doug Oram and Marian McLaren, both of Silverton, agreed to test a complaint that a hotel would not serve beer to persons with long hair.

The couple, who work with disadvantaged children, both have long hair. They ordered beer and the waitress refused to serve them.

"They asked her 'Why can't we have a beer?'" Guibault said. "She said, 'We don't serve your type.'"

"She said something about them being dirty and having their hair uncombed and then she said something like 'there might be more of your type outside waiting to get in.'"

He said Oram and Miss McLaren had specifically taken baths and dressed their hair in anticipation of such a challenge.

Frank Pho, the hotel owner, said he was set up for the charge.

"If you run a business, you've got to be responsible," he said. "The Innkeepers' Act says I have the right to refuse service if I think it's necessary."

"I want to run a good establishment. Those ones from the woods understood how I wanted things done. When they first came here, the longhairs wanted to run my establishment."

"We came to the bottom of that in a hurry. I'm in charge here. Everything was going smoothly for all the people here until this case came along."

Mrs. Ruff testified before the inquiry board that the case was crucial to establish whether the Human Rights Code or the Innkeepers Act has precedence.

One section of the Human Rights Code says that no person can be refused a customary service "unless reasonable cause exists for such denial or discrimination."

B.C. Tories Meet

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Progressive Conservative Party will hold its annual convention in Vancouver Oct. 10-13 and Conservative Premier Robert Hatfield of New Brunswick will be a major speaker.

Prisoner Hunted

AGASSIZ (CP) — Police in the Vancouver area were searching Sunday for Anthony Gus, 22, a native Indian who was serving a six-year sentence for manslaughter at the correctional work camp here. Police said the prisoner, who escaped Friday night, is considered dangerous.

Dynamite Found

COQUITLAM (CP) — Bomb disposal experts Sunday removed two sticks of dynamite and a timer from the elevator of a four-storey apartment building in this municipality east of Vancouver. The experts said the device was improperly constructed and could not have exploded. Residents of the building were evacuated.

Plant Lovers Rally to Aid Of Pot Plant

MOSES LAKE, Wash. (AP) — Plant lovers throughout the Pacific Northwest and Alaska have rallied to the aid of a scrawny marijuana plant drooping in the Moses Lake police department.

But the queries, tips and affectionate phone calls haven't helped much.

Marijuana plants, said to flourish nearly anywhere, have died in the local police station, where they are kept to show citizens what they look like.

Chief Wayne Baker said last week he couldn't explain the plants' mortality rate. Since then advice has poured in.

One call came in the early morning from a radio talk show in Anchorage, Alaska. The listeners wanted to know the location of the plant, its lighting, soil and height, said officer Evelyn Brown.

"Advised it was necessary to talk to the plant," she wrote on a police report form, "and insisted I say a few kind words to it so the people of Alaska knew we really cared for it."

Chief Baker said several local lawyers also have offered to aid the plant.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

Most bridge players are opposed to deceptive bidding ("psychic bidding") on the sound assumption that such bidding, which is designed to deceive the opposition, more frequently deceives one's partner. And if the opponents purchase the contract, misdefense usually takes place.

But everybody agrees that deception in play is mandatory if the best results are to be obtained. A good example of "necessary" deceptive play can be observed in today's deal, which arose in a rubber-bridge game.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

East played the ten of hearts on the opening lead, and South won the trick with his ace. With only the spade suit serving as a potential source for the creation of the two needed tricks, South set his sights on this suit. At trick two laid down the ace of spades.

Had East followed suit with his lowest spade, the nine-spot, declarer would probably have brought home four spade tricks. If the nine were a part of the doubleton K-9, it would do South no good to lead his remaining spade and insert dummy's eight. In this (presumed) set-up, West would have started with the 3-xxx; and dummy's queen would be the only additional spade winner that would be created.

Had the nine been played by East, declarer would probably have realized that his only chance of bringing home the suit would be to indulge in the wishful thinking that East had been dealt the doubleton 3-9. And, after leading his remaining spade to trick three, he would put up dummy's queen, hoping to fell the jack. With the jack falling, it would now become a routine matter to give up the ten to West's king, and bring home four spade tricks.

But East, on South's lead of the spade ace at trick two, deceptively dropped the jack. Now it appeared that East might have started with the doubleton K-J. So, at trick three, South led his five of spades, and inserted dummy's eight when West played low.

As is evident, East won the trick with his nine. At the conclusion of play, all declarer had made were the seven tricks with which he had started. Defensive deception had paid a dividend.

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Think of a number and multiply it by seven," said Jill. "Okay."

Jack nodded. "Okay. What next?"

"Put the figure 3 after what you've got, and subtract the number you thought of," replied his sister. "What does that leave?"

"355," replied Jack. "Now you tell me what I started with."

B.C. French Claimed Worst-Treated

By BOB BULL
Special to The Times

CHICOUTIMI, Que. — One of the things that emerged from the first biennial convention of French-Canadians here last week was the differing attitudes with which the various provinces treat Canada's official minority.

It became obvious as convention chairman Jeanne

Sauve, federal minister of the environment, noted that while all governments appear to agree in principle with Canada's bilingual nature, some provinces have not been doing much to put these principles into practice.

In fact the worst-treated French-Canadians are those unfortunate enough to live within the jurisdictions of the government headed by that happy humanist and social democrat, Premier Daye Barrett of British Columbia.

Sauve said that it is now accepted that French-Canadians have a right to be educated in their own language anywhere in Canada.

So it seems. Everywhere that is except in B.C.

Progressive Conservative governments in Alberta and New Brunswick Liberal regimes in Nova Scotia and P.E.I., the NDP in Manitoba all have French schools.

But the Barrett government has refused to go along with such a modest requirement, even though the French-Canadian population of B.C., while small, is the fastest growing French-speaking community in the west.

One of the basic characteristics of any country is the fact that its citizens have free mobility from one of its regions to another.

Thus for example, English-Canadians moving to Quebec have the right assured by that province's language act to have their children educated in their language, and French-Quebecers moving to, for example, Nova Scotia, know that there are some French schools available for their children.

When a head office decides to transfer a French-Canadian to Vancouver, however, the head of the family knows that his children will have no more rights than any foreign immigrants in his own country.

This, needless to say, affects his personal mobility, and thus limits his right to exercise his Canadian citizenship.

But the British Columbia administration has shown other signs of a particularly rednecked attitude as well.

Corinne Auger works for the Centre-Info-communications in Vancouver, an information centre that helps French-Canadians in that city find everything from a French-speaking doctor to a lady who can sew a wedding dress.

Mme Auger says it is the biggest centre of its type in the city and told delegates to the convention that the Barrett government has consistently refused to provide it with the kind of aid given on a regular basis even to other ethnic groups.

"When we ask the province for help," she said, "they tell us that biculturalism is a federal program and we should go to the federal government."

Jean Rioux, director-general of the Franco-Columbian Federation, sees part of the reason for the Barrett government's attitude as the fact that many of its high officials were exposed to United States melting pot theories during their impressionable years as students in American universities.

He complains also, however, of a failure of the B.C. education system to recognize the very real role played by French-Canadians in exploring and developing the province.

"Our children have to go to English schools," he said. "There they learn about all those Scottish explorers who opened up the province but nobody points out that most of the people paddling the canoes that carried those Scotsmen happened to be French-Canadians."

This is another area in which British Columbia could perhaps seek some advice from Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or P.E.I. Sauve remarked in an interview that the province has been given substantial amounts of money by the federal government to defray the costs of second-language French teaching to English-Canadians with very little in the way of tangible accomplishments as a return.

While the federal government could not interfere in the details of the province's education curriculum, she said, it could start asking for results soon and if such results are not forthcoming, cut off the money.

The criticisms of the B.C. government came as a surprise to many Quebec delegates to the convention aware of the efforts that Premier Barrett has been making towards coming to some kind of an understanding with the Parti Quebecois.

One man remembered an apology the premier made to Rene Levesque in Montreal nearly two years ago for his inability to speak French. Barrett said it was because he came from a province where the language was not used.

He could do something about that.

Obscene Calls to Anne

LONDON Princess Anne's secret telephone number has been changed twice because of a rash of obscene phone calls, Scotland Yard said today.

Police said they were investigating how the caller got the unlisted numbers at Oak Grove House, the Sandhurst army home where the Queen's daughter lives with her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips.

The caller took only two days to find the number after it was changed the first time, post office officials said.

Sources said the anonymous calls began about two weeks ago. The caller sometimes speaks to servants in the six-bedroom house, but Anne took some of the calls herself, the sources said.

Police said the calls ranged from the sarcastic to the obscene. Efforts to trace them have proven impossible, and authorities have called in Scotland Yard's special branch to find out how the caller got the secret numbers so quickly.

SYDNEY, Australia — Police in cars, boats and a helicopter chased a runaway hot-air balloon for about 30 miles across Sydney Saturday before it dumped its occupant, restaurant owner Roger Meadmore, in the Hawkesbury River.

Meadmore was using the balloon to publicize his restaurant when the balloon's anchor rope snapped.

The transport department warned aircraft to keep away from the balloon's erratic flightpath while police kept close tabs on it from the land, sea and air.

The balloon flew over the Sydney harbor bridge and up the coast, reaching an altitude of about 3,000 feet before falling into the river. A police launch rescued Meadmore unharmed.

MIAMI It just wasn't James White's night. Police said Friday by two men who demanded his money and started going through his pockets. White said he whipped out a .32-calibre pistol, persuading the men to make a hasty exit.

A minute later, a man who had been sitting next to White on a bus bench grabbed White's wallet and ran off in the same direction as the other two men, police said.

Shark Sighted — In Street

CUMBERLAND, R.I. (AP) — In a year of shark sightings, perhaps the police here shouldn't have been surprised when they received a call Saturday about a shark on a town street.

"I'm not drunk but there's a shark on the road," the distressed caller said.

When police arrived at the scene, they found a shark — a seven foot-one — lying dead in the middle of the road. Police said they were baffled about how the shark appeared in this landlocked town but they assume someone dumped it there.

If Struthers, who has missed the first four episodes of the coming season, does not appear to tape the fifth show Monday, another actress will be hired, a spokesman for the show said Friday.

Struthers has become tired of playing Archie Bunker's daughter and wants to be free to pursue other assignments, her spokesman said.

CALGARY — In an aggressive encounter Sunday, international master Bruce Amos of Toronto pulled an upset defeating Montreal master Kevin Spraggett in 27 moves during the 12th round of the 1975 closed Canadian Chess Championship.

Camille Coudari of Montreal, and Bruce Harper of Vancouver called it a draw after seven moves with Coudari having 28 minutes of playing time while Harper had 23 minutes.

OFFENCE BEST DEFENCE

SEATTLE (AP) — A blood-curdling scream of "Kai," a hearty blow to the kneecap and a hasty exit are a woman's best defence against a potential rapist, women employees for a consulting engineering firm have learned.

"The yell has to come from your gut," Ann Fetter, a first degree black belt in karate and a member of the rape prevention forum, told the women at a special workshop.

Women office workers at the downtown Seattle engineering firm of Kramer, Chin and Mayo requested the rape prevention workshop Tuesday after repeatedly being accosted by drunken men near their office. Some men have strolled into the office itself to grab or chase the employees, they say.

If the karate yell alone proves ineffective, Ms. Fetter showed the women how to embellish their defence by breaking an attacker's kneecap and hurling damaging blows to the throat, teeth, nose, eyes, and groin.

"Put your hands together and come down off the bridge of his nose," she advised for an attack from the front. "You could also follow that up with a swift knee-kick to the groin. Or, if you're carrying books, shove them into his face."

But she added a word of caution about the value of quick, strategic retreat.

"Don't think you can hang around and beat the guy up."

First we built a mid-size car inside.
Then we built a sub-compact around it.

Most cars are built the other way around. Body style first, passenger comfort second. Which is why in the back seat of so many cars, your head slants forward. Or your knees meet your chest. Or you shift positions sitting over the hump every time you hit a bump.

At Honda, we've virtually eliminated these problems. Because we designed our car from the inside out. What we ended up with is a sub-compact car with as much room as some mid-size cars. The experts have described our car best.

"Many makes talk about small on the outside, big on the inside, but Honda has done it." (Road and Track).

How'd we do it? Our car's shape is trapezoidal. A rectangle that's wider at the bottom than the top for all kinds of good reasons. For example, we give you more room where you really need it. More leg room on the floor and more seating room.

Another part of our roominess story is also a performance story. We gave our car front-wheel drive, not just to eliminate the hump inside, but for its excellent road-hugging ability.

Then we mounted the engine sideways to provide even more space. This also places the engine weight directly over the drive wheels for better traction. For added comfort, we equipped the Civic with a McPherson strut suspension, independent on all four wheels, for a stable yet cushioning ride.

The Honda Civic is more car than you'd expect. It's fast and yet it's economical to run. In fact, in the 1975 U.S. Environmental Protection Agency gas mileage test, the Honda Civic recorded a remarkable 49.2 miles per gallon for highway driving and 33.6 miles per gallon for in-city driving. Now, just try and find another car that performed as well.

Smokers' Cancer Test

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI) — Doctors may have discovered a test to detect a "precancerous condition" in smokers, according to the secretary of the American Cancer Society.

Allan Jonas told the New Mexico division of the Cancer society during the weekend the test will be discussed next month at the first meeting of the American Cancer Society's task force on tobacco and cancer.

He said he learned of the test in a recent letter from a physician-researcher at the University of California.

The test findings are determined by a study of scrapings from the inside of a smoker's mouth, Jonas said.

The cancer society official said he felt such a test would be accepted by the public because the link between smoking and certain types of lung cancer were "undeniable."

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumers can expect little or no relief in the price of beef, pork and poultry over the next year or so. This is suggested in a recent report on the world feed grains situation by the agriculture department.

Although production in the 1975-76 crop year is expected to exceed last year's, feed grain supplies are expected to remain tight, virtually eliminating any possibility of lower prices.

Agriculture department economist J. S. Carmichael said in the report that most Canadian feed-grain yields should be average. Total production is expected to be slightly more than 18 million tons.

"Production is not likely to be large enough to give any increase in supply over that of 1974-75," Carmichael said.

"This means no improvement in the relatively tight supply situation that has existed in Canada for the last two years."

The poultry industry is most dependent on feed: up to 85 per cent of the cost of producing a broiler chicken is in grains and feed supplements.

The proportion is 40 to 45 per cent in hogs and up to 33 per cent in slaughter cattle finished in a feedlot. Cattle matured by grazing require less feed grains.

Couple the anticipated stabilization of feed grain prices at their present high level with higher costs in every other agricultural sector and higher "consumer prices are the almost inevitable result."

A possible offsetting factor is increased stocks of cattle, hogs and chickens, but agriculture department officials think this likely will occur only in hogs and will mean only a slight decline, if any, in currently high pork prices.

An estimated 4.89 million metric tons — the international grain measurement — of feed grains were on hand in Canada July 1. The projection for next July 1 is 4.3 million tons.

Total production in 1974-75 is estimated at 17.43 million tons, imports, at 1.1 million tons, and domestic reserves at 6.16 million — a total supply of 24.69 million tons. Subtract domestic consumption of 16.8 million and exports of three million, and the July 1 stocks is 4.89 million tons.

The projection for next July 1 is arrived at by adding 4.9 million in domestic reserves, 18.3 million in production and 1.3 million imports for a total supply of 24.5 million tons. Subtract 17 million tons used and 3.2 million exported and the stocks figure is 4.3 million tons.

Total world stocks last July 1 are estimated at 41 million metric tons and the projection for this date next year is 50 million.

India's Press Gag Defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — India's ambassador to the United States says Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was justified in imposing news censorship because the Indian news media were "publicizing incitement to revolt."

Ambassador Triloki Nath Kaul also said Sunday that within the next few months Mrs. Gandhi will end the state of emergency in India and "we'll return to normal."

"But if the opposition and other elements do not cooperate, the emergency will have to last a little longer," he added.

Appearing on CBS-TV's Face the Nation, Kaul defended the censorship, saying "neither the press nor anybody else is above the law."

He said the government found it advisable to apply the same rules to local and foreign reporters, even though he found a great contrast between the Indian and American press.

Kaul noted that the United States has a 200-year-old tradition of press freedom that included "a system of moderators."

Medicare Cuts Cost B.C. $170M

Proposed changes in federal financing of medicare will cost B.C. $170 million over the next five years, Health Minister Dennis Cocke said today.

The minister released the figure here at the opening of a two-day gathering of provincial health ministers, who are plotting strategy to fight federal plans to cut back on health care financing.

In his opening statement to the meeting, Cocke asked other provinces to also calculate their losses over the next five years if Ottawa goes through with its June 23 budget proposal to put a ceiling on its contribution to medicare.

(The total cost to all provinces will likely be about $1.7 billion, Cocke told reporters outside the closed-door meeting.)

B.C. also called on the other provinces to unanimously agree to refer the matter to the premiers' conference in Newfoundland later this week.

"I'd like to see the whole matter clarified by the first minister," said Cocke. "... it has to be settled on a political level first."

He called on the provinces to express unanimous objection to the federal government move and to boycott any further technical discussions on health care financing until the question of principle has been resolved.

The provinces, he said, should agree to refrain from individual discussions with the federal minister of health until a resolution has been found.

The June 23 budget proposed that the federal government would place a ceiling on the increases it will make to the cost of medicare starting next year. Ottawa now pays about 50 per cent of approved health care costs.

Ottawa also announced it would terminate in five years its participation in hospital care financing, in which it currently pays 50 per cent of costs at present.

The other provincial health ministers also presented position papers at today's conference and indications are they will be unanimous in opposing the federal proposals.

Convicts Charged With Murder

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Three prisoners arrested after a June hostage-taking incident at the B.C. penitentiary have been charged with murder-punishable by life imprisonment, crown lawyer Thomas Fisher said Sunday.

Fisher said in an interview the charges were laid last week and will be read in provincial court today when prisoners Clair Wilson, Dwight Lucas and Andrew Bruce appear. They are also charged with attempted escape, attempted extortion, unlawful confinement and possession of offensive weapons.

Ladysmith Race Fight Sees 2 Whites Shot

LADYSMITH — A 25-year-old man was to appear in Nanaimo provincial court today on two attempted murder charges.

William Rossbleff, a native Indian of no fixed address, was arrested about 5 p.m. Sunday following a 14-hour search and blockade of the Chemainus Indian band reserve three miles north of Ladysmith.

The arrest followed a fight that broke out about 2 a.m. Sunday between a group of whites and Indians outside the Sportsman Hotel on First Avenue after the bar closed.

Three shots were fired, sending Bradley David Lockhart, 23, and Robert Lamontagne, 21, both of Ladysmith, to hospital.

Lockhart is in fair condition today in Nanaimo General Hospital with gunshot wounds in the arm and abdomen. Lamontagne was treated for superficial wounds to the stomach and arm, and released.

Ladysmith RCMP said they found a .303 rifle at the scene.

A helicopter, a police dog and 17 policemen from nearby detachments were brought in to help with the search, which ended when the dog flushed a suspect from brush near the reserve.

RCMP said the suspect is not a member of the Chemainus band.

Hard-working officials took a rest as the Western Canada Games ended in Regina on the weekend but there was talk of renewing them to 1978, possibly in Victoria. Vancouver Island athletes took a share of the spotlight on the weekend with Phillip Delesalle, a 16-year-old gymnast from Victoria, emerging as the games' top individual winner with five of a possible six gold medals. Brontfman Home Safe, $2.3M Ransom Recovered

Brontfman with FBI agents after rescue

Times News Services

NEW YORK — The kidnapping ordeal of Samuel Brontfman II came to an abrupt and safe end early Sunday when scores of federal agents freed him from a Brooklyn apartment.

Eight days of pressure apparently were too much for one of two suspects on the case. Dominick Byrne, wracked by conscience, led officers to the dimly lit apartment where they freed Brontfman and captured the second of his alleged abductors.

"It was over in two seconds," said Detective Thomas Cerbone, who broke into the one-bedroom apartment Sunday with police and FBI agents.

Officers grabbed a surprised Mel Patrick Lynch, 37, who was guarding young Brontfman.

Samuel—unshaven—sat bound and blindfolded on a couch against the wall.

"Thank God," he said as officers removed adhesive tape from his eyes. Unharmed, he was taken by limousine to his father's Fifth Avenue apartment.

The FBI said the $2.3 million ransom paid by the youth's father, Edgar Brontfman, chairman of the board of Seagram's Ltd., was recovered in the home of an elderly friend of Byrne's.

Byrne, 33, owner of a limousine service, and Lynch, a city fireman, were charged with extortion by mail. The FBI said they believed the two acted alone. Officers said the elderly friend was an innocent victim of the scheme.

If convicted, the two could be fined up to $5,000 and sentenced to 20 years in prison. Federal agents indicated they may be charged with kidnapping later.

Young Brontfman and his father left the city Sunday for seclusion and rest. The family said there would be no statements.

But a spokesman added, "Sam is in really fine shape. His spirits are great."

For Cerbone and other officers, it was the end of a frustrating week of searching and tense negotiations.

Samuel, 21, was abducted Aug. 9 after leaving his father's tree-shrouded estate in Yorkton Heights, N.Y. His car, keys still in the ignition, was found in the driveway of his divorced mother's home in Purchase, N.Y.

Cerbone said Byrne, who gave officers the key to the apartment where the youth was found, had "rings of conscience" about the affair.

"He's a deeply religious man. He must have said 'Jesus Christ' and apologized to me five times for saying it," the detective said.

Byrne, apparently alarmed by increasing FBI surveillance in the area near the Lynch apartment, allegedly sent his daughter Mary to a neighborhood police station with a note saying he knew where the Brontfman youth was being held.

Cerbone and his partner, James Senry, went to his house at midnight. Byrne appeared relieved as he told them about Brontfman's location.

But apparently authorities already were closing in on the pair.

The New York Daily News, quoting "highly informed sources," said Brontfman was ordered to bring the money Saturday morning and wait in an underpass beneath a subway line in an outlying New York borough.

The money was in 49 packets of bills in denominations of $10, $20, $50 and $100. The ransom was half the $4.6 million originally demanded by the kidnapers.

Brontfman, accompanied by a female FBI agent, drove to the location, the news said. About 3 a.m., a rust-colored 1971 automobile pulled up and someone ordered Brontfman to put the money into the trunk, the news said.

As the car sped away, the agent took down its licence number.

Neighbors of the two suspects described them as frugal, hard-working, deeply religious men with strong feelings about the strife in their native Ireland.

'Under Gun' On Reserve

LADYSMITH — Tension is building on the Chemainus Indian reserve near here as a power struggle continues between the elected band council and a rival faction in the band.

"We've been living under the gun for two months now," said band manager George Harris today.

The new faction, led by band members Steve Sampson and Larry Seymour, have demanded the resignations by today of all elected band councillors so the band can return to the hereditary system of choosing a chief.

Chief councillor Alfred Louis said today the council intends to serve out their terms, and will not resign.

Harris said tension on the reserve has built since June 11, when Sampson's group took all the files and books from the band office.

Since then the books have been guarded day and night at Sampson's home by a group of supporters, some of them armed, many of them members of the American Indian Movement.

Sampson said he has simply set up a rival band office to replace the old office, which wasn't using government funds in a way that helped many needy people on the reserve.

"The majority of the tribe is with us," he said, although Harris denies it.

Sampson said the present elected council is dominated by one family. The old hereditary system, abandoned in 1948, gave leadership of the band to a group of elders representing the major family groups on the reserve.

"We're just trying to do it legally and properly," said Sampson. The elected band councillors and Harris have never been threatened, he said.

Sampson said he was present early Sunday morning with several friends, at a fight which broke out between Indians and whites in front of Ladysmith's Sportsman Hotel.

He refused to give details until he spoke to a lawyer, but stressed that the incident had nothing to do with the dispute on the reserve, and that the Indians were not acting on behalf of AIM, which is a spiritual not a violent movement.

Sampson's group has already presented a petition to the band council asking for a return to hereditary chiefs, and he said another may be presented today.

He said if the resignations aren't forthcoming today, his group may consider taking legal action against the band council, although he did not say on what grounds action would be taken.

Harris said the council did not take immediate action when the band account books were taken in June.

It gave the splinter group time to look at the books and see they were all in order, he said.

By the time the council did go to the RCMP and ask for help in recovering the books, they were told by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald that the issue was a civil matter and not one the police could act on, he said.

Harris said the band council would never take up arms against their own people to get the books back.

Port Mellon Pulpworkers Vote 96% Against Report

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian pulpworkers union members at a mill northwest of here have voted 96 per cent to reject a non-binding report on the British Columbia forest dispute, a union officer said Sunday.

Fred Allnutt, a delegate to the union's negotiating committee said in an interview the 400 members at Canadian Forest Products' Port Mellon mill voted Friday and Saturday.

Both the CPU and the Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada have recommended that their 13,000 members reject the report by Mr. Justice Henry Huttcheon of the B.C. Supreme Court.

The workers on strike since July 16, have shut down B.C.'s 20 pulp mills to support contract demands.

Packers Appeal to LRB

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Fisheries Association of British Columbia has asked the provincial labor relations board to declare illegal a strike that has shut down the west coast fishing industry for three weeks.

In the latest move to end the strike, which has halted all fish-packing operations on the B.C. coast, the companies have asked the board to rule that the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union (UFAWU) has violated the labor code by continuing to picket after two UFAWU sections accepted the industry offer.

Although the fishermen have rejected three offers from the 14 fish packing companies in the association, union shoreworkers and tendermen have accepted contract offers.

Homer Stevens, president of the 7,000-member unions, said Sunday the companies are "well aware that if any section refuses, the strike continues."

UFAWU members have been on strike since July 23.

Stevens said that if the association wants to bargain separately with union groups "there could be three different strikes... we could be on strike all the time."

"I think instead of running to the board for this kind of thing they should get back to the bargaining table," Stevens said.

Union secretary-treasurer,

Jack Nichol, announced last week that union fishermen rejected the companies' latest two-year offer by 85 per cent.

The Native Brotherhood of B.C., representing about 1,500 native Indian fishermen, went on strike Aug. 4, but have since accepted the same offer agreed to by UFAWU shoreworkers and tendermen.

Brotherhood spokesman Lonnie Hindle said Sunday the native fishermen would not return to work for the fish-

Refinery Fire Kills 3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Three firemen died when they were caught in flames Sunday during a spectacular refinery blaze and were turned into human torches.

At least three more firemen were missing and five others were among 13 persons injured in the fire at the Gulf Oil Co. refinery which started Sunday. It was declared under control early this morning by the Philadelphia fire board.

"The flames just engulfed them," said Fire Commissioner Joseph Rizzo, describing how he escaped the first of dozens of explosions, but looked back to see three of his men sealed in flames.

"They were trying to get under the foam, but to no avail," he said. "They were human torches."

The blaze at the second-largest refinery on the East Coast could be seen for 20 miles. Flames covering an area about a half-mile square roared into a spreading cloud of black smoke.

The fire started at dawn Sunday when an 80,000-barrel storage tank ignited while being filled with oil from a tanker.

When the Wind Blows, Look Out!

Riding the Hammerheads

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Wind, not rain, is the new bugbear of major construction projects in balmy B.C.

When breezes blow 30 miles an hour, money goes down the drain at projects sprouting those long-boomed hammerhead cranes.

These sky trolleys have to shut down in a strong wind, in turn immobilizing workmen who depend on them for supplies in multi-storey construction.

The loss in construction time and wages is one undesirable result, and every day the crane's idle costs unproductive rental.

In windy Victoria construction loss is probably as much due to crane shutdown as to rainstorms or other climatic conditions.

Workers employed by Cana Construction at the courthouse expansion project jokingly say crane operator John Brum has the easiest job on the site.

Brum, of 587 Peto Place in Saanich, has been an operator for three years. He agrees there can be plenty of boredom but when things are humming, he's an important man.

"You have everybody's life in your hands," he said today just before he climbed into the four-foot-square control capsule on the main boom.

"You have to put the load on the exact right spot. That can be rough—especially if it's windy and it often is in Victoria."

At present seven of the hammerheads sweep the sky over downtown Victoria buildings, six of them owned and leased by Mutual Equipment Rentals Ltd., which was the first to bring the system to Victoria about 15 years ago.

Manager Lorne Broughton agrees the hammerheads are spectacular, dramatic and potentially hazardous — for the operator something like flying and being in jail at the same time.

But unlike ground-based cranes, the hammerheads have built-in, automatic safety controls and in Victoria their operators have always put safety first.

For example, he said Gene Denyluk, operator of the crane on 14-storey North Park Manor, refuses to make a move until checking the vitals of his machine before each shift. All work requiring supplies or equipment waits until Denyluk is satisfied.

Denyluk is frequently the last man off the job, preferring to make some adjustments before going home. Besides, he has the farthest to walk to get back to earth.

It can be cold up there in his tiny cabin on the boom, half-way between heaven and North Park Street.

But over a certain point wind pressure makes operation too hazardous, and there is a cutout switch on the electrical system to shut off all power. Another cutout is activated by an overload.

Working in heavy wind is "pretty well hopeless," Broughton said, although the job suffers without the crane.

Hammerheads are "the kingpin of the whole job," dominating productivity as well as the skyline.

This type of crane — invented in post-war Germany — has almost entirely replaced the materials hoist, which runs like an elevator in a long column of steel framework on some jobs. But it hasn't eliminated the man hoist for jobs more than 20 storeys.

Compensation laws prohibit men travelling in materials buckets.

Broughton estimates hammerheads save 15 per cent on construction time and 10 per cent on cost. They are so busy the construction foreman allows crane time to each trade on the job so there is no dispute over priorities.

He also directs the crane operator, using two-way radio, and is the only person in contact with the operator.

Elaborating on the safety theme, Broughton indicated crane operators may be safer aloft than many a neck-craving pedestrian trying to keep his eye on the swinging boom.

But holding the main components require daily inspection because they may work loose under strain. At the end of a job, or 12 months, whichever comes first, they are replaced with new bolts of high tensile steel.

The cables get a daily going over and are changed with each job, and a log book of safety and maintenance checks is kept by the operator.

If the equipment is sound and automatic breakers are in order, there should be no accidents resulting from misuse or mechanical fault, but in conceivable as it may seem, some operators — not here — have been known to bypass an overload switch to permit a heavier load to be raised.

This could cause the mast to bend and possibly collapse, Broughton explained.

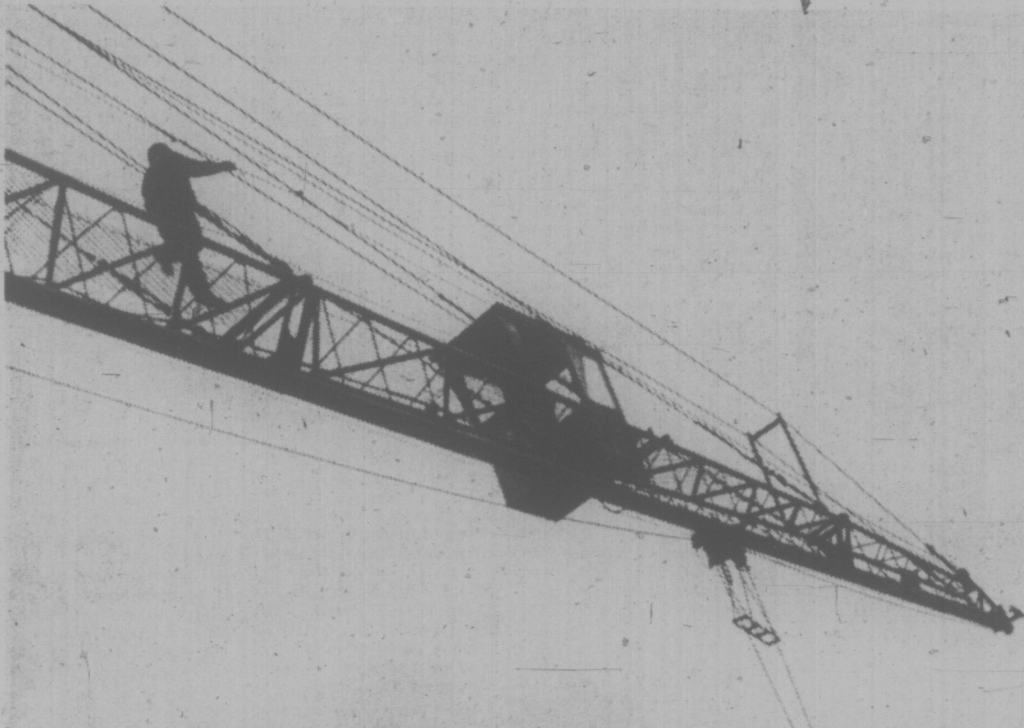

In Vancouver a crane operator escaped a plunge into the street when his crane crashed down over the edge of the building and hung there. He crawled gingerly back to the roof along a mangled boom.

Broughton could not pinpoint the cause in that case, but it

THAT Was a Newspaper: Memories of the War

A brief mention here the other day about Bill Ward, of the Wildlife Review, and your correspondent working for The Maple Leaf, the wartime Canadian Army newspaper, has resulted in some pleasant letters from ex-servicemen, one of whom writes, "It may not have been the world's best newspaper, but it was certainly the most avidly read."

I grant you this may be the year's most inconsequential historical footnote, but it's made me very happy and as The Maple Leaf's news editor in London, and, later, its managing editor in Delmanhorst, in northern, occupied Germany, I wonder if it doesn't deserve at least a small, fond tribute.

Matter of fact, it was one of the world's best newspapers, as we remember it, and certainly the United Kingdom edition, which was put out in the Evening Standard offices in Shoe Lane, just off Fleet Street, was about as close to a newspaperman's dream as any that's ever gone to press.

A small group of us had all the resources of one of London's best-equipped plants, three available wire services and a string of our own correspondents. We were not bothered with the income demands of an advertising department or a need for circulation since we had a guaranteed captive audience as long as Canadians remained in uniform.

Our readers, too, as the ex-serviceman writes me, were of that dream variety who digest every line with total interest and a downright touching gratitude. It was a bad time in the world, but I never had such fun or rewards at work.

One Christmas, I remember, we used the whole front page for a picture of a scene in Quebec. It was a very simple picture, just a horse hauling a sleigh along a deep snow road, but it was a fine picture, too, with the steam coming from the horse's nostrils and you could almost hear the resin sound of runners on dry snow.

I know that gave a lot of hard-boiled soldiers a sweet and mournful breath of home that Christmas night. Indeed, they wrote in droves to tell us so.

Lord Beaverbrook, himself, paid us only one visit. We were warned well in advance. When the Beaver was making a tour of the plant the grapevine spread the news. All the Standard workers would wash their faces and run madly hither and thither. As for us, our only problem was to hide our eccentric cartoonist, Tom Luzny, later to become one of England's top muralists.

Lord Beaverbrook strolled into our office, surrounded by his nervous yes-men and spoke a few words of encouragement to us. Then Luzny sauntered out of his work-room, wearing, as usual, his unpressed battle dress, two rows of German medals he'd picked up somewhere, a Swiss mountaineering cap with a tall feather in it and carrying a vicious-looking foil, since his hobby was fencing.

All of the yes-men gasped in union, but the face of the Beaver — which always reminded me of the face of a terribly alert simian — broke into a remarkable grin. I was never much of a Beaverbrook-lover, even less so when I went to work for him after the war, but after that he went up several notches in my enthusiasm.

Life on the Delmanhorst edition of the paper was not as pleasant. The printing staff, linotype operators, head-setters and make-up men were stolid Germans. The plant, itself, had been the headquarters of a Strength-Through-Joy newspaper and we inherited many of the fanatics who had staffed it.

All of us, the soft-hearted, homesick conquerors, tried at first to ingratiate ourselves with the gloomy Teutons in the hope that they would produce a better-looking newspaper. It didn't work. The Germans worked a slow-down and made demands for longer lunch hours, shorter working hours and higher pay.

It was then that we discovered that a Hitler-type roar produced more than a pleasant smile. The tougher we got the more respect we got. It was a discouraging lesson that made the whole of the occupation an unpleasant business.

Still, life must have been pretty tiresome for them. They were setting type in a foreign language and sometimes we kept them late at night while we waited for Army Signals to relay the world-shaking news of who had won a Toronto Maple Leafs-Montreal Canadiens hockey game.

When they complained of this overtime we had our interpreter explain that the game was an important part of the Canadian Strength-Through-Joy program. This seemed to satisfy them.

Girl Badly Injured

An 18-year-old Langford girl is in critical condition in Victoria General Hospital today following a one-car accident early Sunday morning in Colwood.

Susan Thompson, 2783 Penelope was taken to hospital with multiple injuries.

She was a passenger in a car driven by Ronald Griffiths, 22, of Langford. Griffiths escaped with minor facial injuries.

Colwood RCMP said the car hit a power pole on Jacklin Road, across from Belmont Fisher Senior Secondary School, 12:30 a.m.

Body Found Inside Tank

The decomposed body of a man was found jammed inside a rusting fuel tank on Store Street this morning.

Rene Roy, 45, a welder with Oliver Equipment, found the body when he went to remove the tank and others to another place on the Island Asphalt Producers Ltd. site.

Police say foul play is not suspected. The body is believed to have been there about three months.

McCall Scores Again

For the second straight year, Marshall McCall, 805 Newport Avenue, has won the R. T. Wallace Scholarship for being the top student at the University of Victoria.

McCall, a third-year Arts and Science student, had a perfect A-plus average on his sessional exams, a feat he had also achieved last year.

The scholarship, named after UVic's Chancellor, is worth $800 this year.

McCall is among 270 UVic students to have won $50,500 in scholarships and awards. The winners were announced by the university senate committee on awards.

Another student who is again among the top scholarship winners is Jocelyn Abbott, 3018 Westdowne Road, a third-year Fine Arts student. She won a total of $600, consisting of the Faculty Women's Scholarship ($200), the Rebecca and Esther Lazarus Scholarships in Music ($150), a president's Scholarship ($125) and the Weber Memorial Bursary ($125).

Winner of the second most prestigious award, the $700 British Columbia 1958 Centennial Scholarship, is Louis Bayliss of Kelowna, a third-year Arts and Science student. She was also awarded the Bicks Gold Watch for her contributions to student life.

Masked Men Rob Driver of $310

Two tall masked men robbed a restaurant delivery boy of $310 early Sunday morning, Saanich police said today.

Police said Hugh MacKinnon, 18, a delivery driver from Don Mee's Restaurant, was robbed of $310 in cash as well as personal belongings and the food order.

MacKinnon was making a delivery to an address in the Gordon Head area, which proved to be a vacant home, when he was confronted by two masked men.

One of the men, carrying a single barrel shotgun, ordered MacKinnon to lie face down on the lawn in front of the home, then took his wallet and food.

The men then fled on foot and MacKinnon telephoned police.

The men are believed to be in their early 20s, more than six feet tall and about 170 pounds. Both were wearing dark touques and scarves over the lower portion of their faces.

Police believe the man who called Don Mee's for the delivery was involved in the robbery.

SAVAGE RECOVERING

Victoria Aid, Clyde Savage, who underwent an emergency operation for a blood condition 10 days ago, was discharged from Royal Jubilee Hospital on Saturday.

A city council associate said today Savage is recuperating and "making good progress" at his Shawnigan home.

Ask The Times

Q. What are the approximate populations in the U.S. of whites, blacks and others? W.R.C.

A. The 1975 World Almanac reports a population in 1970 of about 168 million whites and 23 million blacks. Population of Spanish origin in 1973 totalled 10.6 million, made up of about 6.3 million of Mexican origin, 1.5 million of Puerto Rican origin, 700,000 Cuban and 2 million of Central or South American or other Spanish origin.

Board Stands Firm On Alternatives

Greater Victoria school board's decision not to take on any new alternative school projects this year is firm "at the moment," board chairman Bill Ross said today.

Ross said the board has not acceded to government requests, particularly from the human resources department, that it take on responsibility for several local projects previously financed by human resources.

"But if there are school age children in District 61 who would miss an education (without the projects) then we are prepared to accept them into existing programs," he said.

"This year at the provisional budget stage, we decided we would not sponsor any more alterations until the existing ones had been evaluated," said Ross.

The board is sticking to that decision despite the requests, he added.

Projects threatened by partial or total withdrawal of human resources funding include the Warehouse School, the Vic West alternative project, and the Group Home Day Project at Centennial United Church.

CAPTAIN Michael Barrow (left) took over command of the Esquimalt-based 2nd Canadian Destroyer Squadron on Friday.

He succeeds Capt. John Rodocanachi who has been appointed director of maritime requirements (sea) at national defence headquarters in Ottawa. He has been in command of the squadron since July, 1973.

Barrow has been director of maritime requirements (sea) for the past year and, previous to that, served in the directorate of personnel careers (officers) in Ottawa. From 1969 to 1972 he was deputy chief of staff (operations) for the commander, Canadian Flotilla (Atlantic).

His last command afloat was between 1967 and 1969 in the Halifax-based destroyer HMCS St. Laurent.

Check-In Missed, Man Strips

CAIRO (UPI) — A disgruntled Arab who arrived too late for his flight check-in at Cairo Airport stripped naked and demanded he be allowed aboard the aircraft anyway, the newspaper Al Ahras said today.

The man, which the newspaper did not identify by name or nationality, was told he was too late to board the craft.

He stood in the departure lounge and stripped until he was "like the day he was born" and said he would stay that way until airport officials changed their minds.

The man acquiesced when authorities convinced him that it really was too late and promised him he could leave on a later flight, Al Ahras said.

The name of the air carrier was not mentioned by the newspaper.

British PM Ordered Home Burglary — Book

LONDON (Reuter) — A British prime minister, worried about national security in the last decade, ordered a burglary at another politician's home, it is reported in a book to be published in London next month.

The burglary was said to have been carried out by a detective of the police special branch because the prime minister was dubious about some of the politician's activities and was concerned about a security risk.

The only two British prime ministers in the last 10 years have been Harold Wilson and Edward Heath.

The book's authors, Clive Borrell and Brian Coshinella, do not say who was in office at the time, nor do they offer any supporting evidence because to do so would have pinpointed the period involved.

"We have to protect our source," Barrell said in reply to questions about the book, titled Crime in Britain Today.

Borrell has been crime reporter of The Times since 1967 and Coshinella worked for the same paper in the crime field for some years before transferring recently to The Daily Express.

The story of the book's "burglary" claim was broken by a rival newspaper, The News of the World.

Saanich Building Shows Upswing

Construction increased in Saanich in July, 184 permits being issued for a total value of $5,565,912 compared to 162 permits valued at $2,738,350 for July 1974.

In contrast to the national trend, there was an increase in the number of single-family homes started.

There were 89 permits issued for single-family homes and duplexes, an increase of 15 units over July 1974 when the total value was $2,178,400. The 89 permits represented a value of $3,110,800.

In spite of the three-month civil labor dispute the same type of increase is reflected in figures for January, May, June and July of this year. The figures for February, March and April haven't been completed.

A total of 484 permits was issued in the four months for a total value of $15,935,035. Of these 255 were for private homes or duplexes, compared to 266 permits for a value of $6,148,400 in 1974. A total of 460 permits valued at $8,414,320 was issued in the corresponding 1974 period.

The largest projects started in July included two 15-unit Dunhill Developments apartments on Interurban, both valued at $470,200; an addition to Cedar Hill Junior Secondary School valued at $308,273; an addition to Mount Douglas Senior Secondary School, valued at $292,491; a $100,000 addition to Brian Holley Motors Ltd.'s car lot on Douglas, a $125,000 restaurant and beauty salon on Shelbourne and a $91,000 bank building at 2925 Tillicum.

When the Wind Blows, Look Out! ★★★★★

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Wind, not rain, is the new bugbear of major construction projects in rainy B.C.

When breezes blow 30 miles an hour, money goes down the drain at projects sprouting those long-boomed hammerhead cranes.

These sky trolleys have to shut down in a strong wind, in turn immobilizing workmen who depend on them for supplies in multi-storey construction.

The loss in construction time and wages is one undesirable result, and every day the crane is idle costs unproductive rental.

In windy Victoria construction loss is probably as much due to crane shutdown as to rainstorms or other climatic conditions.

Workers employed by Cna Construction at the courthouse expansion project jokingly say crane operator John Brum has the easiest job on the site.

Brum, of 587 Peto Place in Saanich, has been an operator for three years. He agrees there can be plenty of boredom but when things are humming, he's an important man.

"You have everybody's life in your hands," he said today just before he climbed into the four-foot-square control capsule on the main boom. "You have to put the load on the exact right spot. That can be rough—especially if it's windy and it often is in Victoria."

At present seven of the hammerheads sweep the sky over downtown Victoria buildings, six of them owned and leased by Mutual Equipment Rentals Ltd., which was the first to bring the system to Victoria about 15 years ago.

Manager Lorne Broughton agrees the hammerheads are spectacular, dramatic and potentially hazardous—for the operator something like flying and being in jail at the same time.

But unlike ground-based cranes, the hammerheads have built-in automatic safety controls and in Victoria their operators have always put safety first.

For example, he said Gene Denyluk, operator of the crane on 14-storey North Park Manor, refuses to make a move until checking the vitals of his machine before each shift. All work requiring supplies or equipment waits until Denyluk is satisfied.

Denyluk is frequently the last man off the job, preferring to make some adjustments before going home. Besides, he has the farthest to walk to get back to earth.

It can be cold up there in his tiny cabin on the boom, half-way between heaven and North Park Street.

But over a certain point wind pressure makes operation too hazardous, and there is a cutout switch on the electrical system to shut off all power. Another cutout is activated by an overload.

Working in heavy wind is "pretty well hopeless," Broughton said, although the job suffers without the crane.

Hammerheads are "the kingpin of the whole job," dominating productivity as well as the skyline.

This type of crane—invented in post-war Germany—has almost entirely replaced the materials hoist, which runs like an elevator in a long column of steel framework on some jobs. But it hasn't eliminated the man hoist for jobs more than 20 storeys.

Operator John Brum... accuracy counts

★ Compensation laws prohibit men travelling in materials buckets.

Broughton estimates hammerheads save 15 per cent on construction time and 10 per cent on cost. They are so busy the construction foreman allots crane time to each trade on the job so there is no dispute over priorities.

He also directs the crane operator, using two-way radio, and is the only person in contact with the operator.

Elaborating on the safety theme, Broughton indicated crane operators may be safer aloft than many a neck-cranning pedestrian trying to keep his eye on the swinging boom.

★ Bolts holding the main components require daily inspection because they may work loose under strain. At the end of a job, or 12 months, whichever comes first, they are replaced with new bolts of high tensile steel.

The cables get a daily going over and are changed with each job, and a log book of safety and maintenance checks is kept by the operator.

If the equipment is sound and automatic breakers are in order, there should be no accidents resulting from misuse or mechanical fault, but in-conceivable as it may seem, some operators—not here—have been known to bypass an overload switch to permit a heavier load to be raised.

This could cause the mast to bend and possibly collapse, Broughton explained.

In Vancouver a crane operator escaped a plunge into the street when his crane crashed down over the edge of the building and hung there. He crawled gingerly back to the roof along a mangled boom.

Broughton could not pinpoint the cause in that case, but it was undoubtedly an overload or insecure bolt.

Ever wonder how hammerheads get up in the world? Or get back to the ground at the end of a 20, 30 or 40-storey job?

The skyscraper projects make use of a helicopter for final dismantling, but that's costly for smaller jobs, and a mobile crane is put to use.

In Victoria, Mutual Equipment's 65-ton mobile with a 220-foot boom will dismantle the biggest hammerhead on buildings up to about 20 storeys.

★ A smaller crane will lift the four main components into place when the first two floors are completed. The mast section requires two floors for support. As the building rises, the tower is jacked up a floor at a time, which takes about half a full shift to accomplish.

The cone section sits atop the mast to provide a pivot for the boom and tail sections attached to it.

Trolley and hoisting gear run along the boom, which also supports the cabin. Draw works and counterweight are on the tail.

Mutual employs seven hammerhead crane operators aged 25-40 who Broughton describes as typical workmen who enjoy their job and a pay scale 40 cents an hour higher than a mobile crane operator.

The special demands and potential risks so far above the ground are worth $9.80 an hour at present, but it takes a special kind of adjustment to the job and operators are usually in demand.

★ At first, Mutual bought its cranes and broke in its own operators. Today it is possible to attend a six-week school in Vancouver sponsored by contractors and the apprenticeship board, which certifies successful students.

Finally, if you want to rent a hammerhead you have your choice of sizes and lift capacities up to 2½ tons, starting at around $1,000 a month up to $3,400 for the 130-foot boom now working at Laurel Point with two smaller cranes. If you buy, it'll cost you $50,000 to $130,000.
